1. INTRODUCTION

(1) NATURE AND OBJECTIVES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW

1. Nature of civil procedural law.

Although civil procedure has been categorised as procedural rather than substantive law¹, it affects all other branches of the law except criminal law and criminal procedure², for rights under the law may need to be enforced, and a remedy requires procedure³. It is of great antiquity in its origins but has been periodically overhauled, sometimes radically, to meet current needs, most recently by the Civil Procedure Rules⁴. Civil procedural law governs the practice and procedure in the courts and regulates the administration of civil justice. It may be regarded as consisting of three parts, not to be viewed as self-contained compartments but as interrelated with, and overlapping and interacting upon, each other, namely the institutional part, the professional part and the procedural part⁵. Notwithstanding its apparent complexity and its occasional technicality, civil procedural law forms an indispensable part of the machinery of justice and operates as an essential tool for enforcing legal rights and claims, for redressing or preventing legal wrongs, for asserting legal defences, and for such other ancillary purposes as the recognition of personal status, the adjustment of proprietary interests in the case of insolvencies, the administration of estates and of trust property and the like, and for the supervision and control of inferior courts, tribunals and other judicial decision-making bodies. In short, civil procedural law is a necessary legal and social instrument for the attainment of what Lord Brougham called 'justice between man and man'⁶.

This title deals with the practice and procedure of the civil courts, except for those particular matters which are dealt with in other titles of this work⁷ but including the law relating to injunctions⁸, evidence and enforcement of judgments and orders⁹. It also covers the new European order for payment procedure¹⁰ and European small claims procedure¹¹. Detailed provisions about public funding¹², certain specialist proceedings¹³ and proceedings in the Family Division¹⁴ fall outside the scope of this title.

1 In his transcendent work, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae, Bracton devoted a special section to the subject of 'Actions': see 2 Bracton on the Laws and Customs of England 282 et seq, translated by Samuel E Thorne. Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England vol 3 deals primarily with the law of civil procedure. In their History of English Law, Pollock and Maitland have a separate chapter IX in vol 2 on 'Procedure'. Volume I of Holdsworth's History of the Laws of England covers the history of English civil procedural law (see also vols 3 and 9). In his Concise History of the Common Law, Plucknett has a special chapter (Bk 2, Part I) on 'Procedure'. In the celebrated classification of the law in the Institutes of Justinian, following Gaius, equal place is given to the 'Law of Actions' (ie the system of civil procedural law) as is given to the two other branches of the law (ie 'the Law of Persons' and 'the Law of Things'): see RW Lee The Elements of Roman Law (1955) p 4, and the extended treatment of the subject at 421 et seq, under the heading 'Law of Actions'. Cf the dictum of the Committee on Supreme Court Practice and Procedure ('the Evershed Committee') in its Final Report (1953) (Cmd 8878) para 1, 'the shape and development of the substantive law of England have always been, and, we think, always will be, strongly influenced by matters of procedure', citing the celebrated aphorism of Sir Henry Maine that 'substantive law has at first the look of being gradually secreted in the interstices of procedure'.

2. Civil and criminal procedural law.

In the context of 'civil procedural law', 'civil' is used in contradistinction to 'criminal'¹. In the English legal system the distinction between the civil and criminal judicial processes² is manifested in many ways: each has its own structure, organisation, administration and hierarchy of courts³, its own procedure and practices, its own rules of court⁴, its own modes and methods of processing its proceedings, its own rules regulating the place and mode of trial, especially the mode of trial by jury in criminal proceedings⁵ which is virtually obsolete in civil proceedings⁶, its own method of adjudicating on and disposing of its proceedings and, above all, its own system of appeals⁷.

The need for this division arises largely from the fact that, broadly speaking, the primary objective of civil procedure is remedial, to make good civil wrongs by compensation, restitution or satisfaction and, if necessary, by restraint by appropriate relief, whereas the primary objective of criminal procedure is penal or punitive. There is, however, an inevitable, though slight, overlap between the civil and criminal processes in, for example, the award in civil cases of aggravated or exemplary damages⁸, the entitlement to plead criminal convictions in civil cases⁹ and the entitlement to refuse to provide information in certain circumstances on the ground that to do so might tend to expose a person or his spouse to proceedings for an offence¹⁰. In addition the civil court has jurisdiction to make orders for the seizure and confiscation of money and other property under the control of defendants in criminal cases¹¹. Conversely, the criminal courts may make restitution orders¹² and compensation orders¹³ against convicted persons.

The jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights has identified three principal criteria which that court considers when deciding whether proceedings have a criminal character, namely the manner in which the domestic state classifies the proceedings, the nature of the offence and the character of the penalty to which the proceedings may give rise¹⁴. Both under that jurisprudence and as a matter of domestic law, proceedings for the imposition of anti-social behaviour orders¹⁵ are civil proceedings¹⁶. Applications for sex offender orders¹⁷ have also been held to be civil proceedings¹⁸. Note that proceedings for committal for contempt of court have been held to be criminal, even though they may concern enforcement of civil process obligations¹⁹.

1 As to criminal procedure generally see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 1050 et seq.

2 There was not always such a distinction, and in fact there is still some overlap. For example, the defendant's oral plea of 'guilty' or 'not guilty' in a criminal trial is a relic of the original system operating in all courts whereby pleadings were oral rather than written.

3 The Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, however, exercises jurisdiction in respect of certain criminal matters as well as civil matters; as to the civil jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench Division see PARAS 45, 1686 head (2) in the text, 1696-1699; and as to the criminal jurisdiction of that Division see PARAS 1688-1689; and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(4) (2006 Reissue) PARA 2005 et seq.

4 In civil proceedings, rules of court are made by the Civil Procedure Rule Committee under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(1) (see PARA 25) and in criminal proceedings they are made by the Crown Court Rule Committee under the Supreme Court Act 1981 ss 84, 86 (see generally COURTS). Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/(1) NATURE AND OBJECTIVES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/3. Objectives of civil procedural law.

3. Objectives of civil procedural law.

Civil procedural law fulfils many legal and social functions, and its objectives have changed over time. In the present day, the function of the court is not only to decide individual cases but also to ensure that the civil justice system, which is a public service, delivers a satisfactory service which meets public expectations and needs. The civil process is no less a law enforcement process than the criminal process. The civil process is not only for the resolution of individual disputes but also for the protection of rights, for the enforcement of rights, and for remedying breaches.

Civil procedural law has been categorised according to the character which it assumes as the indispensable instrument for the attainment of justice, namely (1) its complementary character; (2) its protective character; and (3) its remedial or practical character.

In its complementary character, civil procedural law is ordinarily contrasted with substantive law. Substantive law creates rights and obligations and determines the ends of justice embodied in the law, whereas procedural law is an adjunct or an accessory to substantive law¹. But this does not mean that civil procedural law should be regarded as secondary. The two branches are complementary and interdependent, and the interplay between them often conceals what is substantive and what is procedural. It is by procedure that the law is put into motion, and it is procedural law which puts life into the substantive law, gives it its remedy and effectiveness and brings it into being².

In its protective character, civil procedural law represents the orderly, regular and public functioning of the legal machinery and the operation of the due process of law. In this sense, the protective character of procedural law has the effect of sustaining and safeguarding every person in his life, liberty, reputation, livelihood and property and ensuring that he does not suffer any deprivation of his rights except in accordance with the accepted rules of procedure.

In its remedial or practical character, civil procedural law deals with the means by which persons can obtain through the litigation process protection from future wrongs, remedies for wrongs suffered, and a resolution of disputes; in this sense it deals with the actual litigation process.

What the practitioners seek for their clients when they resort to the courts is to use the machinery of justice to obtain a just result, and what the clients seek in addition to justice is to avoid unnecessary expense and delay and excessive technicality in the process of attaining that just result.

The Civil Procedure Rules³ have entrusted the control of litigation to the court, giving the court a wider discretion than before to determine the best way of resolving disputes, under the overriding objective of enabling it to deal with cases justly⁴ and enabling it to save expense and time wherever possible.

¹ The classic expression of this view is stated by Collins MR in Re Coles and Ravenshear's Arbitration [1907] 1 KB 1 at 4, CA: 'Although I agree that a court cannot conduct its business without a code of procedure, I think that the relation of rules of practice to the work of justice is intended to be that of handmaid rather than mistress, and the court ought not to be so far bound and held by rules, which after all are only intended as general rules of procedure, as to be compelled to do what will cause injustice in the particular case'. The Civil Procedure Rules which now apply were introduced by the Civil Procedure Act 1997; they are said to form 'a new procedural code with the overriding objective of enabling the court to deal with cases justly': see CPR 1.1; and PARA 33.

- 2 The maxim 'ubi jus, ibi remedium' reflects the complementary character of civil procedural law. As to the distinction between procedural and substantive law see further PARA 4.
- 3 As to the Civil Procedure Rules see PARA 30.
- 4 As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/(1) NATURE AND OBJECTIVES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/4. Meaning of 'practice and procedure'.

4. Meaning of 'practice and procedure'.

The Civil Procedure Rule Committee¹ is empowered to make rules that govern the practice and procedure to be followed in the relevant courts², and they must not therefore extend into the area of substantive law³. There is thus a vital and essential distinction between substantive law and procedural law. The function of substantive law is to define, create or confer substantive legal rights or legal status or to impose and define the nature and extent of legal duties. Everyone is entitled to enjoy such legal rights or status but equally is liable to perform or comply with his legal duties. The function of practice and procedure is to provide the machinery or the manner in which legal rights or status and legal duties may be enforced or recognised by a court of law or other recognised or properly constituted tribunal⁴. Perhaps the term 'practice' is narrower than the term 'procedure', since practice may be limited to the habitual, repetitive or continuous use of practical methods or modes of proceeding, whereas 'procedure' refers to the mode or form of conducting judicial proceedings, whether they be to the whole or part of the suit. The distinction may rarely be invoked, since the terms are almost invariably used in conjunction⁵.

1 As to the Civil Procedure Rule Committee see PARA 25; as to the Civil Procedure Rules see PARAS 9, 30 et seq; and as to the power to make practice directions see PARA 27.

2 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1(1) which has replaced, in civil proceedings, the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 84(1), (2); and PARA 24. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

3 Under the old regime, it was comparatively rare for any of the Rules of the Supreme Court to be attacked or challenged as being ultra vires. For examples in which they were successfully so attacked see Re Grosvenor Hotel, London (No 2) [1965] Ch 1210, [1964] 3 All ER 354, CA (disclosure of documents injurious to the public interest); Ward v James [1966] 1 QB 273, [1965] 1 All ER 563, CA (discretion to order trial by jury). For instances where they were unsuccessfully so attacked see Guaranty Trust Co of New York v Hannay & Co [1915] 2 KB 536, CA (action for declaration of right); Rodriguez v Parker [1967] 1 QB 116, [1966] 2 All ER 349; and Mitchell v Harris Engineering Co Ltd [1967] 2 QB 703, [1967] 2 All ER 682, CA (power to amend after expiry of limitation period). Formerly, contests as to what were matters of 'practice and procedure' and what were not were much more frequent, since under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Procedure) Act 1894 s 1(4) (repealed) and the Rules of the Supreme Court 1883 Ord 54 r 23 (revoked), an appeal from the orders of a judge in chambers lay to a Divisional Court, except in matters of practice and procedure, when the appeal lay direct to the Court of Appeal.

Under the current civil procedure, it has been held that certain provisions of CPR Pt 6 (service of documents: see PARA 138 et seq) are not ultra vires: see Sea Assets Ltd v PT Garuda Indonesia [2000] 4 All ER 371, cited in PARA 139 note 10. However, it was held in General Mediterranean Holdings SA v Patel [1999] 3 All ER 673, [2000] 1 WLR 272 that CPR 48.7(3) (revoked as a result of the decision) was ultra vires in that it purported to abrogate the right to legal professional privilege.

4 As to matters of practice and procedure see Re Oddy [1895] 1 QB 392, CA (review of taxation of solicitor's bill of costs); Black v Dawson [1895] 1 QB 848, CA (application to issue writ for service out of the jurisdiction); McHarg v Universal Stock Exchange Ltd [1895] 2 QB 81, CA (summons for interim injunction); Yonge v Toynbee [1910] 1 KB 215, CA (no authority of solicitors to act for defendant who became of unsound mind without their knowledge); Re Withers & Co [1930] 2 KB 192, CA (order for delivery of bill of costs); Lever Bros Ltd v Kneale and Bagnall [1937] 2 KB 87, [1937] 2 All ER 477, CA (committal order for breach of injunction); Re Shoemith [1938] 2 KB 637, sub nom Re Intended Action, Shoemith v Lancashire Mental Hospitals Board [1938] 3 All ER 186, CA (permission to bring action under the Mental Treatment Act 1930 (repealed)).

As to matters held not to be matters of practice and procedure see Re Marchant [1908] 1 KB 998, CA (order to compel solicitor to pay sums in pursuance of his undertaking); Haxby v Wood Advertising Agency Ltd (1913) 109 LT 946 (attachment against solicitor); Re Jackson [1915] 1 KB 371, DC (retainer of solicitor in criminal proceedings).

The principle arrived at in those cases was that 'practice and procedure' was not confined to steps in the action itself (now known as a 'claim': see PARA 18) but extended also to matters in connection with the action: see Black v Dawson [1895] 1 QB 848, CA, per Lord Esher MR; Yonge v Toynbee [1910] 1 KB 215, CA, per Buckley LJ; Re Shoesmith [1938] 2 KB 637, sub nom Re Intended Action, Shoesmith v Lancashire Mental Hospitals Board [1938] 3 All ER 186, CA, per Slesser LJ. Thus the test for deciding whether a matter was one of practice and procedure was whether it was one in, or in connection with, a cause or matter: see Watson v Petts [1899] 1 QB 54, CA; Re Marchant [1908] 1 KB 998, CA; and Re Jackson [1915] 1 KB 371, DC. This test is still valid, and certainly a factor in determining what falls within the ambit of practice and procedure. Quite uncharacteristically Greer LJ fell into the error of adopting the test that matters of practice and procedure were interlocutory and referred to decisions given in the course of legal proceedings to get a final result, and were to be contrasted with matters that led to final decisions: see Re Withers & Co [1930] 2 KB 192, CA; Re Shoesmith [1938] 2 KB 637, sub nom Re Intended Action, Shoesmith v Lancashire Mental Hospitals Board [1938] 3 All ER 186, CA. As to the meaning of 'cause or matter' see PARA 44 note 1. However, the current civil procedure (see PARA 24 et seq) no longer employs this terminology: see PARA 18.

The Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7 empowers the court to make orders for the purpose of securing the preservation of relevant evidence or of property which is or may be the subject matter of proceedings: see PARA 319. This section puts on a statutory footing the High Court's powers to grant search or 'Anton Piller' orders and implements in part the recommendations made by a committee of judges appointed by the Judges' Council in Anton Piller Orders: A Consultation Paper (LCD 1992).

5 The classic statement of this distinction is that expressed by Lush LJ, with the approval of Baggallay LJ, in Poyser v Minors (1881) 7 QBD 329 at 333-334, CA: "Practice' in its larger sense . . . , like 'procedure' . . . denotes the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the law which gives or defines the right, and which by means of the proceeding the court is to administer the machinery as distinguished from its product. "Practice', and 'procedure', . . . I take to be convertible terms'. In Mitchell v Harris Engineering Co Ltd [1967] 2 QB 703 at 720, [1967] 2 All ER 682 at 687, CA, Russell LJ also described the terms as convertible. In R v Sillim, The Alexandra (1864) 10 HL Cas 704 at 723, Lord Westbury LC said that the common and ordinary sense of the word 'practice' denoted the rules that make or guide the cursus curiae and regulate the proceedings in a cause within the walls or limits of the court itself. In the court below Erle CJ had said 'I would premise that procedure in a suit includes the whole course of practice, from the issuing of the first process by which the suitors are brought before the court to the execution of the last process on the final judgment; and . . . "procedure' is used as equivalent to "process, practice, and mode of pleading": A-G v Sillem (1864) 2 H & C 431 at 627.

5. Right to a fair trial.

The right to a fair trial is a fundamental principle of the common law and is also guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights¹, which has been incorporated into domestic law². Thus, in the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law³. As specified in the Convention, this also means that judgment must be pronounced publicly although if necessary the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial⁴.

The right to a fair trial is an aspect of procedural fairness or 'natural justice'. The rules of natural justice must be observed by courts, tribunals, arbitrators and all persons and bodies having the duty to act judicially, except where their application is excluded expressly or by necessary implication, or by reason of other special circumstances⁵, and bias, or apparent bias, on the part of a court or tribunal in a particular case will render its decision unlawful⁶. Another element of natural justice, the rule that no man is to be condemned unless he has been given prior notice of the allegations against him and a fair opportunity to be heard, is also a fundamental part of the rules of procedure⁷, in such respects as giving notice of a claim, of a hearing or adjournment and giving the other party an opportunity to reply to the claim and the opportunity to be heard⁸.

6. General rule that hearings are to be in public.

In accordance with the right to a fair trial¹, the general rule is that any hearing, including a trial², is to be in public³, but the court⁴ is not required to make special arrangements for accommodating members of the public⁵. A hearing, or any part of it, may be in private if:

- 1 (1) publicity would defeat the object of the hearing⁶;
- 2 (2) it involves matters relating to national security⁷;
- 3 (3) it involves confidential information (including information relating to personal financial matters) and publicity would damage that confidentiality⁸;
- 4 (4) a private hearing is necessary to protect the interests of any child⁹ or protected party¹⁰;
- 5 (5) it is a hearing of an application made without notice and it would be unjust to any respondent for there to be a public hearing¹¹;
- 6 (6) it involves uncontested matters arising in the administration of trusts or in the administration of a deceased person's estate¹²; or
- 7 (7) the court considers this to be necessary, in the interests of justice¹³.

The court may order that the identity of any party or witness must not be disclosed if it considers non-disclosure necessary in order to protect the interests of that party or witness¹⁴.

In furthering the overriding objective¹⁵ by actively managing cases the court may hold a hearing and receive evidence by telephone or by using any other method of direct oral communication¹⁶, particularly where it considers this to be necessary, in the interests of justice, or may deal with the case without the parties needing to attend at court¹⁷.

The procedural judge must keep, either by way of a note or a tape recording, brief details of all proceedings before him, including the dates of the proceedings and a short statement of the decision taken at each hearing¹⁸.

1 See PARA 5.

2 In CPR Pt 39 (see the text and notes 3-18; and PARA 1117 et seq), reference to a hearing includes a reference to the trial: CPR 39.1.

3 CPR 39.2(1). Under the European Convention on Human Rights (Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969)), as incorporated into domestic law, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing in the determination of his civil rights and obligations. Judgment must be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interest of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice: see the Human Rights Act 1998 s 1(3), Sch 1, art 6(1). Article 6(1) will usually be relevant where a party applies for a hearing which would normally be held in public to be held in private as well as where a hearing would normally be held in private. The judge may need to consider whether the case is within any of the exceptions permitted by art 6(1): Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.4A.

An appeal to a county court against certain decisions under the Representation of the People Act 1983 in relation to anonymous entries in the electoral register is to be heard in private unless the court orders otherwise, and an appeal to the Court of Appeal against such a decision of a county court may be heard in private if the Court of Appeal so orders: see Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.7A; Practice Direction--Appeals PD 52 para 24.5(8), (9). See ELECTIONS AND REFERENDUMS.

6 CPR 39.2(3)(a).

7 CPR 39.2(3)(b).

8 CPR 39.2(3)(c). For examples of types of hearing which fall within this category see Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.5. Such examples include (1) a claim by a mortgagee against one or more individuals for an order for possession of land; (2) a claim by a landlord against one or more tenants or former tenants for the repossession of a dwelling house based on the non-payment of rent; (3) an application to suspend a warrant of execution or a warrant of possession or to stay execution where the court is being invited to consider the ability of a party to make payments to another party; (4) a re-determination under CPR 14.13 (see PARA 198) or an application to vary or suspend the payment of a judgment debt by instalments; (5) an application for a charging order (including an application to enforce a charging order), third party debt order, attachment of earnings order, administration order, or the appointment of a receiver; (6) an order to attend court for questioning; (7) the determination of the liability of a client funded by the Community Legal Service under the Community Legal Service (Costs) Regulations 2000, SI 2000/441, reg 9, reg 10, or of an assisted person's liability for costs under the predecessor provisions (the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989, reg 127 (revoked)); (8) an application for security for costs under the Companies Act 1985 s 726(1) (see PARA 746 note 4; and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 308); (9) proceedings brought under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, the Inheritance (Provision for Family and Dependents) Act 1975 or the Protection from Harassment Act 1997; and (10) an application by a trustee or personal representative for directions as to bringing or defending legal proceedings: see Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.5(1)-(10). Nothing in the relevant practice direction, however, prevents a judge ordering that a hearing taking place in public is to continue in private or vice versa: see para 1.8.

9 As to the meaning of 'child' see PARA 222 note 3.

10 CPR 39.2(3)(d). This includes applications under CPR 21.10 (see PARA 187; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1422) for the approval of a settlement or compromise on behalf of a child or protected party, or an application for the payment of money out of court to such a person: see Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.6.

12 CPR 39.2(3)(f).

13 CPR 39.2(3)(g). The decision as to whether to hold a hearing in public or in private must be made by the judge conducting the hearing having regard to any representations which have been made to him: Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 1.4.

14 CPR 39.2(4).

15 As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

16 See CPR 3.1(2)(d); and PARA 247. Detailed provisions for the arrangements to be made for the hearing of applications by telephone are set out in Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 6: see PARA 309. If the parties wish to use video conferencing facilities and they are available at the relevant court, they must apply for directions as to the arrangements to be made: para 7. As to the use of video conferencing in relation to interim proceedings see Practice Direction--Written Evidence PD 32 para 29.1, Annex 3; and PARAS 1033-1035.

17 See CPR 1.4(2)(j); and PARA 246. As to dealing with applications without a hearing see CPR 23.8; and PARA 308.

7. Sources generally.

The sources of civil procedural law are several and disparate, although together they contribute to make up the general body of law and practice. They include:

- 8 (1) statute law¹;
- 9 (2) rules of court²;
- 10 (3) practice directions³;
- 11 (4) judicial precedent⁴;
- 12 (5) prescribed and practice forms⁵;
- 13 (6) the inherent jurisdiction of the court⁶;
- 14 (7) the practice of the court⁷; and
- 15 (8) books on practice and procedure⁸.

These sources differ in origin, authority and weight, but must nevertheless be taken and treated as an entire and integral whole, providing a complete and comprehensive account or description of the system for the administration of civil justice.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/ (2) SOURCES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/8. Statute law.

8. Statute law.

The primary source of civil procedural law is statute law, which deals with the structure, organisation, jurisdiction and hierarchy of the civil courts and the power to make rules of court to regulate the practice and procedure for the conduct of proceedings. The statute law relating to civil procedure is contained in an enormous number of statutes dealing with the multifarious, diverse, disparate and heterogeneous subjects comprised in civil procedural law¹. There is an obvious obligation on all legal practitioners, court administrators and officers, and the courts themselves, to search and research for the applicable statutory provisions arising in any particular case², for the relevant statute law is paramount in its operative effect on the civil judicial process³.

In construing a statute which affects only the practice and procedure of the courts, the presumption against retrospective interpretation has no application, and unless the statute otherwise provides, expressly or by necessary implication, any changes effected by such a statute will apply to pending proceedings and indeed will have retrospective effect⁴.

Where a statute confers a jurisdiction upon a court, then, unless the exercise of such jurisdiction is made conditional upon rules of court first being made, the fact that no rules have been made regulating the procedure does not prevent the jurisdiction from being exercised⁵.

1 It is difficult, if not impracticable, to list the entire range of statutes which deal wholly or in part with civil procedural law and practice. A very large number of them will be found mentioned in the Supreme Court Act 1981, which made substantial and consequential amendments to some of their provisions, partly repealed others and further made transitional provisions and savings: see s 152 (amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004; and SI 1982/1188). The Supreme Court Act 1981 has itself been amended from time to time, eg by the Civil Procedure Act 1997: see PARA 24 et seq. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). Accordingly the Supreme Court Act 1981 is to be cited as the Senior Courts Act 1981 and for the words 'Supreme Court Act 1981' wherever they occur in any enactment there are to be substituted 'Senior Courts Act 1981': see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1. At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes.

In addition, there are many other subjects which form an integral part of civil procedural law which are dealt with, in whole or in part, by other statutes. For convenience, therefore, and without in any way attempting to be exhaustive, reference may be made to the following statutes, many of which have, of course, been amended by later legislation: the Access to Justice Act 1999; the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933; the Administration of Justice Act 1982; the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876; the Arbitration Acts 1950 and 1996; the Attachment of Earnings Act 1971; the Charging Orders Act 1979; the Children Act 1989; the Civil Evidence Acts 1968, 1972 and 1995; the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978; the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989; the Contempt of Court Act 1981; the County Courts Act 1984; the Courts Act 1971; the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990; the Crown Proceedings Act 1947; the Evidence (Proceedings in Other Jurisdictions) Act 1975; the Fatal Accidents Act 1976; the Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act 1933; the Insolvency Act 1986; the Limitation Act 1980; the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980; the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973; the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984; the Mental Health Act 1983; the Oaths Act 1978; the Patents Act 1977; the Solicitors Act 1974; the State Immunity Act 1978; the Town and Country Planning Act 1990; the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977; the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992; the Courts Act 2003; and the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007.

2 Perhaps the case of Wauchope v Mordecai [1970] 1 All ER 417, [1970] 1 WLR 317, CA, may provide a cautionary tale, for in that case, at first instance, the judge was not referred to the Civil Evidence Act 1968 s 11, which had a decisive effect upon the case.

3 The primary statutes which provide the essential framework of civil procedural law are the Civil Procedure Act 1997; the Supreme Court Act 1981; and the County Courts Act 1984. These Acts deal with the structure, organisation, jurisdiction and the distribution of business of the Supreme Court (see note 1) (which consists of the Court of Appeal, the High Court of Justice (dealing with civil proceedings) and the Crown Court (dealing with criminal proceedings): see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 1(1)), and of the county courts.

9. Rules of court.

The Civil Procedure Rules 1998 ('CPR')¹ are the rules of court that currently govern the practice and procedure to be followed in the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal, the High Court², and the county courts³. The Civil Procedure Rules are divided into Parts and most Parts are supplemented by practice directions⁴. For the first time, there are rules common to most civil proceedings in the courts exercising jurisdiction in England and Wales⁵. It has been held that, while the court continues to have an inherent jurisdiction to regulate the conduct of civil litigation, a claim is to be dealt with according to the Civil Procedure Rules where the subject matter of the claim is governed by those rules⁶.

There is authority under the old rules for the proposition that, where one rule of court is expressed in general terms and another on the same subject is specific, the specific rule will prevail⁷. The tendency of modern practice is to confer a wide discretion on the courts to apply the rules of court; this is achieved by conferring a power on the court and providing that the power 'may' be exercised⁸. This principle may survive the change of the rules⁹.

The Civil Procedure Rules are a form of delegated or subordinate legislation, and the Civil Procedure Rule Committee is empowered to make rules only within the strict limits defined by statute, whether contained in the Civil Procedure Act 1997 or any other Act¹⁰. Like the Rules of the Supreme Court and the County Court Rules before them, the rules are mere rules of practice and procedure, and their function is to regulate the machinery of litigation; they cannot confer or take away or alter or diminish any existing jurisdiction or any existing rights or duties¹¹. Since they are procedural in character and effect, they cannot enable a claim to be brought which could not otherwise have been brought¹².

1 The Civil Procedure Rules are the product of a wholesale review of the civil justice system in the 1990s led by Lord Woolf. In 1995 he presented a draft report Access to Justice to the Lord Chancellor. The Final Report and draft civil procedure rules were published in July 1996 and his recommendations were in large part adopted by the government. The Civil Procedure Act 1997 provided the necessary rule-making powers and the CPR themselves were contained in a statutory instrument and came into force on 24 April 1999: see the Civil Procedure Rules 1998, SI 1998/3132; and PARA 30 et seq.

The Civil Procedure Rules (comprising rules, practice directions, pre-action protocols and forms) are published by the Stationery Office. They are also available on the Ministry of Justice website: www.justice.gov.uk.

8 See A-G v Emerson (1889) 24 QBD 56, CA; affd [1891] AC 649, HL. The use of the term 'may' as the basis of exercising a power necessarily involves 'may not', and this gives the court a discretion which no rule of practice can take away. Equally, where rules of court refer to the exercise of powers 'at any time' or 'at any stage', in applying the rules the court should not diminish the full force of these words, unless by some necessary implication their force ought to be limited: see Re Sadler, ex p Norris (1886) 17 QBD 728 at 731, CA, per Esher MR.

10. History of rule-making powers.

Before 1833 there was no statutory body which had power to make rules of court having statutory force and effect to regulate the practice and procedure of the superior courts of common law or of the Court of Chancery or other courts. Before that time, and perhaps for many centuries before then, it was the judges of each of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, and the Lord Chancellor in the case of the Court of Chancery, who exercised the power to issue orders or directions to regulate their own proceedings in their own several courts as occasion demanded from time to time. They did not do so under any statutory authority but under the inherent jurisdiction of the courts to regulate their own processes¹. In 1830 Parliament conferred power on the judges of the superior courts of common law to make general rules to regulate proceedings in their own courts respectively², but although these rules were not to have statutory force the judges did in fact make such rules³. In 1833 Parliament for the first time delegated to the judges of the superior common law courts, acting in concert, power to make rules of court relating mainly to the mode of pleading (but without power to dispense with the plea of the 'general issue') which were to have the force of law, and to be treated as if enacted by Parliament⁴, and, acting under this new power, the judges proceeded to make such rules⁵, which were the first rules of court to have the force of law⁶.

Nevertheless, during the middle period of the nineteenth century, from 1833 to 1875, the practice and procedure of the superior courts of common law, and of the Court of Chancery, were regulated by or by virtue of statute rather than rules of court⁷.

In the Court of Chancery, the power to make rules of court, within a limited scope, was introduced in 1850⁸ and was later extended to cover the whole procedure of the court⁹, and it was under this power that the great Consolidated Orders 1860 were issued.

In 1873 there was scheduled to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 a body of rules called the 'Rules of Court' which were to have the force of law¹⁰, but they were replaced by a revised and greatly improved body of rules, also called the 'Rules of Court', which were scheduled to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875¹¹.

These rules of court were superseded by the Rules of the Supreme Court 1883, made by the Rule Committee to which greatly extended powers were delegated to make rules of court having the force of law. They came into operation on 24 October 1883. These rules were frequently amended, and remained in force until they were partially revised and superseded by the Rules of the Supreme Court (Revision) 1962¹² and soon thereafter wholly revised and superseded by the Rules of the Supreme Court 1965¹³, which came into operation on 1 October 1966. Thus it was that, for the first time since 1883, the entire Rules of the Supreme Court, revised and rewritten, reorganised and restructured, were made and issued as a complete, integrated body of rules of court. They revoked all the former rules and orders, some 144 made since 1883, and repealed the provisions of nine Acts of Parliament.

On 25 April 1999 the Rules of the Supreme Court and the County Court Rules were replaced by the Civil Procedure Rules¹⁴, the Schedules to which re-enacted various provisions of the former rules¹⁵. The Civil Procedure Rules themselves have been amended regularly since their commencement¹⁶.

They replaced in their entirety the parts of the rules relating to the commencement and progress of proceedings until and including the summons for directions, as well as many of the administrative rules and rules relating to particular proceedings. They represented the first stage of the complete revision of the existing rules recommended in 1951 by the Committee on Supreme Court Practice and Procedure (the 'Evershed Committee') in its Second Interim Report (Cmd 8176), and were supplemented by the Rules of the Supreme Court (Forms) 1962, SI 1962/2146 (revoked), which replaced a large number of the earlier prescribed forms so as to provide forms for the new procedure.
- 13 The Rules of the Supreme Court 1965, SI 1965/1776 (revoked), were made under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 99 (repealed), but then had effect as if made under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 84 (now amended by the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 10, Sch 2 para 1(1), (4) and SI 2004/2035 so as to confine the rule-making power conferred thereby to rules for the purpose of regulating and prescribing the practice and procedure to be followed in the Crown Court except in relation to any criminal cause or matter). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. They completed the revision of the then existing rules recommended by the Evershed Committee (see note 12), and restated, with minor amendments, the rules revised in 1962 as well as replacing the remaining rules which had survived from the Rules of the Supreme Court 1883.

11. Judicial precedent.

As in other branches of the law, judicial precedent plays a crucial and significant part in civil procedural law¹. Some of the cases decided by the courts are of far-reaching importance and may be said to have a virtually legislative effect, so much have they changed the operation of procedural law². The decision of a court upon a procedural question, on what may be called 'procedural facts', may well have the effect of creating a substantive legal right or imposing a substantive legal duty, without deciding the substantive merits in the particular case.

1 As to judicial decisions as authorities see PARA 91 et seq; and as to the use of cases decided under the old rules as an aid to interpreting the Civil Procedure Rules see PARA 33 text and note 2.

2 Three illustrations will suffice to demonstrate the importance of judicial precedent in the field of civil procedural law.

Anton Piller KG v Manufacturing Processes Ltd [1976] Ch 55, [1976] 1 All ER 779, CA, enabled the court to require a defendant to permit the plaintiff (now known as the claimant) to enter his premises and to take into custody and detain and preserve illicit articles infringing the claimant's rights and related documents as to which there is a real fear that they might be destroyed or disposed of, and to require the defendant to make full disclosure of all such documents and to answer interrogatories (now to provide further information: see PARA 611). This power has now been given statutory force by the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7: see PARA 319. Such orders are one of the interim remedies listed in CPR Pt 25 and are now described as 'search orders': see CPR 25.1(1)(h); and PARAS 315 head (8), 319, 402 et seq.

The Mareva [1980] 1 All ER 213n, CA, distinguishing Lister & Co v Stubbs (1890) 45 ChD 1, CA, and applying Nippon Yusen Kaisha v Karageorgis [1975] 3 All ER 282, [1975] 1 WLR 1093, CA, empowered the court to grant an injunction, called a 'Mareva injunction', to prevent a defendant from removing or disposing of his assets out of the jurisdiction. This power has now been given statutory force by the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(3). Such orders are described in CPR Pt 25 as 'freezing injunctions': see CPR 25.1(1)(f); and PARAS 315 head (6), 318, 396 et seq. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

Arthur J S Hall & Co (a firm) v Simons, Barratt v Ansell (t/a Woolf Seddon (a firm)) [2002] 1 AC 615, [2000] 3 All ER 673, HL, established that advocates should no longer enjoy immunity against suits in negligence in respect of their conduct of civil or of criminal cases as it was no longer in the public interest to maintain the immunity in favour of advocates. In so doing, it overruled Rondel v Worsley [1969] 1 AC 191, [1967] 3 All ER 993, HL, as modified by Saif Ali v Sydney Mitchell & Co (a firm) [1980] AC 198, [1978] 3 All ER 1033, HL. See further LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 822; NEGLIGENCE vol 78 (2010) PARA 20.

The important cases decided annually by the courts on what are called procedural points are at least as numerous as those decided on other branches of the law, and taken together the judicial decisions on matters of practice and procedure form a considerable corpus of civil procedural law. For guidance on public interest policy considerations see Keating v Bromley London Borough Council [2003] EWHC 1070 (QB), [2003] All ER (D) 204 (May).

Note that it has been held that the responsibility for monitoring and controlling developing practice as regards a field such as funding litigation under the Access to Justice Act 1999 lies with the Court of Appeal, which is best placed to respond with speed and sensitivity, and the House of Lords should be slow to intervene: see Callery v Gray (Nos 1 and 2) [2002] UKHL 28, [2002] 3 All ER 417. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. At the date at which this volume states the law, no such day had been appointed.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/ (2) SOURCES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/12. Practice directions.

12. Practice directions.

Practice directions provide a source of civil procedural law¹. They provide directions as to matters of practice and procedure for the assistance and guidance of litigants in the conduct of their proceedings, and in the administration of civil justice generally, and they are of enormous value to the courts, to practitioners and to all who are involved in the civil judicial process².

In the High Court, practice directions are issued from time to time by the Heads of Divisions³. The authority for such practice directions lies in the inherent jurisdiction which empowers the courts to regulate and control their own process⁴. In fact, these practice directions are made for the High Court under the inherent power of the Heads of Division, namely the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls (so far as they affect civil appeals), the Chancellor of the High Court and the Head or Deputy Head of Civil Justice⁵.

Many of the Parts of the Civil Procedure Rules are supplemented by practice directions, within the scope of the rules, as provided for by the Civil Procedure Act 1997⁶. The practice directions supplementing the Civil Procedure Rules are made pursuant to statute and have the same authority as the rules themselves⁷.

Unlike the rules themselves, the practice directions are thus not made by statutory instrument. They are not laid before Parliament or subject to either the negative or positive resolution procedures in Parliament. They go through no democratic process. There was formerly no ministerial responsibility for practice directions made for the Supreme Court by the Heads of Division⁸. Now, however, directions which fall within the category of 'designated directions'⁹ may generally only be given or made with the agreement of the Lord Chancellor¹⁰.

Practice directions (including those which supplement the Civil Procedure Rules) do not take effect so as to amend or revoke any rules or regulations made by statutory instrument¹¹. Practice directions supplementing the Civil Procedure Rules may, however, modify or disapply any provision of the rules during the operation of pilot schemes¹².

1 It was formerly held that practice directions did not, strictly speaking, have the force of law: see eg Hume v Somerton (1890) 25 QBD 239; Re Langton, Langton v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1960] 1 All ER 657, [1960] 1 WLR 246, CA; Barclays Bank International Ltd v Levin Bros (Bradford) Ltd [1977] QB 270, [1976] 3 All ER 900. Perhaps the most important practice directions which were held not to have the force of law but indeed to be contrary to the law were those issued in 1936 by the judges of the Chancery Division in respect of applications for payment or for possession or other relief in mortgage actions under the Rules of the Supreme Court 1883 Ord 55 r 5A (revoked), which were amended by Practice Directions [1958] 2 All ER 384, [1958] 1 WLR 655: see Birmingham Citizens Permanent Building Society v Caunt [1962] Ch 883, [1962] 1 All ER 163; London Permanent Benefit Building Society v de Baer [1969] 1 Ch 321, [1968] 1 All ER 372. These directions had earlier been unsuccessfully challenged in Hinckley and South Leicestershire Permanent Benefit Building Society v Freeman [1941] Ch 32, [1940] 4 All ER 212; Robertson v Cilia [1956] 3 All ER 651, [1956] 1 WLR 1502; Four-Maids Ltd v Dudley Marshall (Properties) Ltd [1957] Ch 317, [1957] 2 All ER 35; Braithwaite v Winwood [1960] 3 All ER 642, [1960] 1 WLR 1257. Nevertheless, the directions were of such importance in mortgage actions that they have, as it were, been embodied in statute law: see the Administration of Justice Act 1970 s 36(2); and the Administration of Justice Act 1973 s 8, which negated Birmingham Citizens Permanent Building Society v Caunt [1962] Ch 883, [1962] 1 All ER 163 and London Permanent Benefit Building Society v de Baer [1969] 1 Ch 321, [1968] 1 All ER 372. See Centrax Trustees Ltd v Ross [1979] 2 All ER 952; and MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARA 555.

2 Perhaps the most important practice direction was that issued by the House of Lords in which it announced that it would no longer be bound by its own decisions: see Practice Note [1966] 3 All ER 77, sub nom Practice Statement [1966] 1 WLR 1234, HL, negating London Tramways Co v LCC [1898] AC 375, HL. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. At the date at which this volume states the law, no such day had been appointed.

3 See PARA 27.

4 See PARA 27. Formerly, RSC Ord 63 r 11 (revoked) provided that there should be uniformity of practice both in the Central Office and in all the district registries. No such provision appears in the Civil Procedure Rules. As to the Central Office and the district registries see PARAS 51, 54.

5 See PARA 27 note 3; and see Re C (legal aid: preparation of bill of costs) [2001] 1 FLR 602, CA, per Hale LJ. As to the Head of Civil Justice see the Courts Act 2003 s 62 (substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15, Sch 4 Pt 1 para 330). The Head of Civil Justice is normally the Master of the Rolls: see the Courts Act 2003 s 62(1) (as so substituted).

6 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 ss 1(2), 5(1), Sch 1 paras 3, 6 (s 5(1) substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 13(2), Sch 2 Pt 2 para 6); and PARA 27. As to the meaning of 'within the scope of the rules' see PARA 24 note 2.

7 See PARA 27. In the case of any conflict between a rule and a practice direction, the rule prevails: see The Queen's Bench Guide (2007 Edn) para 1.3.2 in The Civil Court Practice.

8 See Professor Jolowicz 'Practice Directions and the Civil Procedure Rules' [2000] CLJ 53 p 61: 'It is right that the court should retain its power to regulate its own procedure within the limits set by statutory rules, and to fill in gaps left by those rules; it is wrong that it should have power actually to legislate'. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes.

9 'Designated directions' means directions under another Act which are, by virtue of provision in that Act, to be made or given in accordance with the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 2 Pt 1: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 1. Designated directions include those providing for the removal or transfer of proceedings within the High Court between divisions or district registries or between county courts: see PARA 27.

10 See the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3. Designated directions are to be made by the Lord Chief Justice or by a judicial office holder nominated by the Lord Chief Justice with the agreement of the Lord Chancellor: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 2(1). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder to make or give designated directions generally, or to make or give designated directions under a particular enactment: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 2(2). 'Judicial office holder' has the same meaning as in s 109(4): Sch 2 Pt 1 para 2(3)(a). References to the Lord Chief Justice's nominee, in relation to designated directions, mean a judicial office holder nominated by the Lord Chief Justice Sch 2 Pt 1 para 2(1) to make or give those directions: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 2(3) (b). The Lord Chief Justice has appointed the Master of the Rolls to make practice directions for the civil courts.

The Lord Chief Justice, or his nominee, may make or give designated directions only with the agreement of the Lord Chancellor: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3(1). This does not apply, however, to designated directions to the extent that they consist of guidance about any of the following: (1) the application or interpretation of the law; (2) the making of judicial decisions: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3(2). Nor does it apply to designated directions to the extent that they consist of criteria for determining which judges may be allocated to hear particular categories of case; but the directions may, to that extent, be made or given only after consulting the Lord Chancellor: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3(3). If the agreement of the Lord Chancellor is required but he does not agree designated directions made or given by the Lord Chief Justice, or by his nominee, the Lord Chancellor must give that person written reasons why he does not agree the directions: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3(4).

13. Pre-action protocols.

Pre-action protocols are statements of understanding between legal practitioners and others about pre-action practice and which are approved by a relevant practice direction¹. Pre-action protocols outline the steps parties² should take to seek information from and to provide information to each other about a prospective legal claim³. They derive their authority from the practice direction and are referred to in the Civil Procedure Rules themselves, which provide for consequences of non-compliance with them⁴.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/ (2) SOURCES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/14. Forms.

14. Forms.

By its very nature, civil procedural law requires the use of forms for the written documents used in the application and operation of the judicial process. At almost every stage of civil proceedings, a form of document is required. This expresses what has to be done or what has been done, and contains the only authentic record of the step that is being or has been taken in the course of civil proceedings¹.

In this sense, therefore, forms play their part as a source of civil procedural law. The Civil Procedure Rules refer to three main classes² of such forms³, namely, new or N forms⁴, practice forms⁵, and county court forms⁶. N forms are the new forms to be used after 26 April 1999⁷ that are referred to in and required by the practice directions supporting the rules⁸; practice forms are those forms that were previously prescribed forms in the High Court or approved by the masters of the Queen's Bench and the Chancery Divisions and that may still be used⁹; and the county court forms are those forms that were prescribed or practice forms in the county courts before 26 April 1999 and that will continue in use on or after that date in amended form to ensure consistency with the new rules¹⁰.

The forms set out in a practice direction must be used in the cases to which they apply¹¹. A form may be varied by the court or a party if the variation is required by the circumstances of a particular case¹², but must not be varied so as to leave out any information or guidance which the form gives to the recipient¹³. Where the rules require a form to be sent by the court or by a party for another party to use, it must be sent without any variation except such as is required by the circumstances of the particular case¹⁴.

Where the court or a party produces a form shown in a practice direction with the words 'Royal Arms', the form must include a replica of the Royal Arms at the head of the first page¹⁵.

1 See the Preface to Chitty and Jacob's Queen's Bench Forms (19th Edn) at p x. It was there further stated that 'Forms provide the lubrication for the smooth working of the machinery of justice. The right form used at the proper time and place and for the proper purpose saves untold time, trouble and expense, whereas the use of the wrong form or the use of the right form but not at the proper time or place or for the proper reason causes delay, obstructs the work of the court and increases costs'.

These forms are set out in Practice Forms for use in Proceedings in the High Court and in the Forms Supplement to The Civil Court Practice. 15. Inherent jurisdiction of the court.

Unlike all other branches of law, except perhaps criminal procedure, there is a source of law which is peculiar and special to civil procedural law and is commonly called the 'inherent jurisdiction of the court'¹. In the ordinary way the Supreme Court², as a superior court of record, exercises the full plenitude of judicial power in all matters concerning the general administration of justice within its territorial limits, and enjoys unrestricted and unlimited powers in all matters of substantive law, both civil and criminal, except in so far as that has been taken away in unequivocal terms by statutory enactment³. The term 'inherent jurisdiction' is not used in contradistinction to the jurisdiction of the court exercisable at common law or conferred on it by statute or rules of court⁴. The jurisdiction of the court which is comprised within the term 'inherent' is that which enables it to fulfil, properly and effectively, its role as a court of law⁵. It has been said that the overriding feature of the inherent jurisdiction of the court is that it is a part of procedural law, both civil and criminal, and not a part of substantive law; it is exercisable by summary process, without a plenary trial; it may be invoked not only in relation to parties in pending proceedings, but in relation to any one, whether a party or not, and in relation to matters not raised in the litigation between the parties; it must be distinguished from the exercise of judicial discretion; and it may be exercised even in circumstances governed by rules of court⁶. Note, however, that a recent decision has held that, while the court continues to have the inherent jurisdiction to regulate the conduct of civil litigation, a claim should be dealt with in accordance with the rules of court and not by exercising the court's inherent jurisdiction where the subject matter of the claim is governed by those rules⁷.

In sum, it may be said that the inherent jurisdiction of the court is a virile and viable doctrine, and has been defined as being the reserve or fund of powers, a residual source of powers, which the court may draw upon as necessary whenever it is just or equitable to do so, in particular to ensure the observance of the due process of law, to prevent vexation or oppression, to do justice between the parties and to secure a fair trial between them⁸.

1 For a full analysis of the subject see Jacob's 'The Inherent Jurisdiction of the Court' (1970) 23 Current Legal Problems 23 et seq.

2 As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes.

The county courts also have an inherent jurisdiction to regulate their own procedures provided that the exercise of this power is not inconsistent with statute or statutory rules: Langley v North West Water Authority [1991] 3 All ER 610, [1991] 1 WLR 697, CA. Further, the County Courts Act 1984 s 76 provides that, in any case not expressly provided for by or in pursuance of the 1984 Act, the general principles of practice in the High Court may be adopted and applied to proceedings in the county court; and see also s 38 (substituted by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 3; and amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 ss 12(2), 15(1), 146, Sch 1 Pt 2 para 17, Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 160, 167, Sch 18 Pt 1), which provides that subject to the County Courts Act 1984 s 38(2)-(7), in any proceedings in a county court the court may make any order which could be made by the High Court if the proceedings were in the High Court: s 38(1) (as so substituted). Section 76 has been held to allow a county court judge to exercise the same inherent power as the High Court in restraining a litigant from making applications without permission: Wayte v Slocombe and Rose (15 June 1994, unreported), CA; Ebert v Birch [2000] Ch 484, [1999] 3 WLR 670, CA, per Lord Woolf; and see also Grepe v Loam (1887) 37 ChD 168, CA. NOTE 2--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/ (2) SOURCES OF CIVIL PROCEDURAL LAW/16. Court guides and other court practice sources.

16. Court guides and other court practice sources.

A rather undefined source of civil procedural law is the practice of the court, not expressed in practice directions nor in any particular case, but a course of proceedings which has been followed over a period of time by successive judges¹. To some extent, 'the practice of the court' has been recognised by statute as a source of civil procedural law². It is, however, not easy to define what is the practice of the court or how it is to be ascertained, and, in any event, it is thought that it would be open to a judge to come to a conclusion which may differ from what he may be told or knows to be the practice of the court³.

Certain civil courts publish guidance as to the conduct of cases therein⁴. Such guidance does not have the force of law but it is expected that parties will comply with it and failure to do so may have adverse costs consequences and it is important in practice⁵.

1 See Salm Kyrburg v Posnanski (1884) 13 QBD 218, DC, where both Huddleston B and Grove J supported their judgments on appeal from an order of the judge in chambers giving leave to issue a writ of attachment by saying that they were informed by the masters that that was a general practice that had been followed since the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, and Grove J added, at 224, 'This, of course, is not conclusive on us, but it seems to me to afford an argument to the extent that it is a reason for not interfering with the actually existing practice unless the arguments against it strongly preponderate'. See also Stumm v Dixon & Co and Knight (1889) 22 QBD 529, CA; Davies & Co v André & Co (1890) 24 QBD 598, CA; Hume v Somerton (1890) 25 QBD 239; Harbottle v Roberts [1905] 1 KB 572, CA; Re Mercantile Lighterage Co Ltd [1906] 1 Ch 491; Morison v Telfer [1906] WN 31. The old maxim was that 'the practice of the court is the law of the court', and it reflected the principle that the court is always slow to depart from an established practice.

2 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 67, which provides that business in the High Court is to be heard and disposed of in court (ie in open court or in public) except in so far as it may under that or any other Act, under rules of court or in accordance with the practice of the court, be dealt with in chambers or in private. Although it is placed on the same footing as rules of court, the phrase 'the practice of the court' is not defined, or even described, and it remains a somewhat vague and obscure, if not ambiguous, term; but as to hearings in public or private since 26 April 1999 see CPR 39.2; and PARAS 6, 1117. 17. Practice books.

From very early times, books on practice and procedure have provided both the courts and practitioners with a convenient and valuable source of civil procedural law. Such books are in constant, even everyday, use¹, and are relied on as giving guidance, assistance and even authority to matters of practice and procedure. Books of a more academic nature have also increasingly been relied upon².

1 It would be idle to refer to the ancient books which dealt with practice and procedure of bygone days, although, of course, they are of great historical interest and value. The book of outstanding authority in this sphere is Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleading in Actions in the Queen's Bench Division (3rd Edn) published in 1868, which encapsulated the practice of the superior common law courts before the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts 1873 and 1875. Modern works include: The Civil Court Practice (otherwise known as the 'Green Book'); Civil Procedure (otherwise known as the 'White Book'); Atkin's Court Forms; Bullen, Leake and Jacob's Precedents of Pleadings (16th Edn, 2007); Butterworths County Court Precedents; and Blackstone's Civil Practice (annual edition).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/(3) GENERAL DEFINITIONS/18. Claim.

(3) GENERAL DEFINITIONS

18. Claim.

The Civil Procedure Rules do not use the titles 'actions', 'matters', or 'causes', which were, previously, used in their technical senses and had important distinctions between them¹. Whereas previously a writ, summons, or other originating process was issued in order to commence proceedings² now they are started by the court issuing, at the request of a claimant, a 'claim'³ in the prescribed form. A 'claimant' is a person who makes a claim, and a 'defendant' is a person against whom a claim is made⁴. Any person who, pursuant to, or by virtue of, rules of court or any other statutory provision, has been served with notice of proceedings or has intervened in them is a 'party'⁵.

1 See, eg, the definitions contained in the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 151(1); and PARA 44 note 1. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. As to the current civil procedure see PARA 24 et seq.

2 'Proceedings' is not defined in the Civil Procedure Rules, but is referred to: see eg CPR Pt 7 (how to start proceedings); and PARA 116 et seq. It is the term used to refer to the entirety of the steps taken between commencement (by the court issuing a claim form at the request of the claimant) and conclusion (usually by judgment being satisfied).

3 In the Civil Procedure Rules, although undefined as a general term, 'claim' is the word used to refer to either the whole of any case, or a separate cause of action in that case (see eg CPR 7.3; and PARA 119), or a petition or application (see eg CPR 6.2(c); and PARA 138 note 6).

4 CPR 2.3(1). Any number of claimants or defendants may be joined as parties to a claim: see CPR 19.1; and PARA 210. The rules governing the bringing and defending of claims by children and protected parties are to be found in CPR Pt 21: see PARA 222; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1409 et seq.

5 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 151(1). 'Party' may mean 'person' (see Long v Crossley (1879) 13 Ch D 388) or it may mean claimants or defendants collectively (see Joyce v Beall [1891] 1 QB 459, DC). As to the addition and substitution of parties, representative parties, and group litigation see CPR Pt 19; and PARA 210 et seq; and as to litigation friends of parties who are children and protected parties see CPR Pt 21; PARA 222; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 1411-1417.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/(3) GENERAL DEFINITIONS/19. Claim for personal injuries.

19. Claim for personal injuries.

A 'claim for personal injuries' means proceedings in which there is a claim for damages in respect of personal injuries to the claimant or any other person or in respect of a person's death, and 'personal injuries' includes any disease and any impairment of a person's physical or mental condition¹.

¹ CPR 2.3(1). This definition follows that which was given in RSC Ord 1 r 4(1) (revoked). See also the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 35(5), which defines 'personal injuries' in identical terms for the purposes of ss 32A-35. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. As to the limitation period for such claims see the Limitation Act 1980 s 11; and LIMITATION PERIODS vol 68 (2008) PARA 998.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/1. INTRODUCTION/(3) GENERAL DEFINITIONS/20. Claims founded on contract or tort.

20. Claims founded on contract or tort.

The distinction between claims founded on contract and those founded on tort is important in connection with service out of the jurisdiction¹, limitation periods² and the measure of damages³.

So far as service out of the jurisdiction is concerned where the permission of the court is required, proceedings in contract may be entertained by the court in a variety of circumstances⁴ whereas the court may entertain proceedings in tort only if damage is sustained within the jurisdiction or the damage sustained resulted from an act committed within the jurisdiction⁵.

The limitation period⁶ in respect of claims founded on tort runs (1) where the tort is actionable per se, from the date of its commission⁷; (2) where the tort is a continuing one or is repeated, from the date of each repetition⁸; (3) where the tort is actionable only on proof of special damage, from the date when the damage occurs and not the date of the act giving rise to the damage⁹; and (4) in other torts, from the date when the injury was committed, whether or not it was then apparent¹⁰; a cause of action accrues from the date the damage occurs, not the date of discovery¹¹. In respect of wrongs causing personal injury or death, special time-limits are provided¹². The limitation period in respect of claims founded on simple contract runs from the date of the breach¹³.

The measure of damages in contract differs from that in tort¹⁴. Exemplary damages are not awarded for breach of contract¹⁵, nor nominal damages for delictual negligence¹⁶.

In deciding whether a claim is founded on contract or on tort the substance of the claim must be looked at; the form of it as stated in the statement of case is not determinative¹⁷. Where the breach of duty alleged arises out of a liability independently of the personal obligation undertaken by contract, the claim may be said to be founded on tort¹⁸, and it may still be founded on tort, even though there may happen to be a contract between the parties, if the duty in fact arises independently of that contract; a claim may be said to be founded on contract where that which is complained of is a breach of duty arising out of the obligations undertaken by the contract¹⁹.

21. Cause of action.

'Cause of action' has been defined as meaning simply the facts the existence of which entitles one person to obtain from the court a remedy against another person¹. The phrase has been held from the earliest time to include every fact which is necessary to be proved to entitle the claimant to succeed, and every fact which the defendant would have a right to dispute². 'Cause of action' has also been taken to mean that particular act on the part of the defendant which gives the claimant his cause of complaint³, or the subject matter or grievance founding the claim, not merely the technical cause of action⁴.

The same facts or the same transaction or event may give rise to more than one effective cause of action⁵.

A cause of action arises wholly or in part within a certain local area where all or some of the material facts which the claimant has to prove in order to succeed arise within that area⁶.

A reasonable cause of action means a cause of action with some chance of success, when only the allegations in the statement of case are considered⁷.

22. The court.

The Civil Procedure Rules contain rules of court applicable to proceedings in both the High Court and the county courts¹. Under the rules, reference to the 'court', where the context requires, means a reference to a particular county court, a district registry, or the Royal Courts of Justice².

The use of the term the 'High Court' or the 'court' or the 'court or a judge' in any enactment requires the court's jurisdiction under the statute to be exercised only by a single judge of the High Court³ unless (1) by or by virtue of rules of court or any other statutory provision that jurisdiction is required to be exercised by a Divisional Court⁴; or (2) by rules of court that jurisdiction is made exercisable by a master, district judge or other officer of the court, or by any other person⁵.

1 See PARAS 9, 24 et seq.

2 CPR 2.3(3). With regard to CPR Schs 1, 2, however (Scheduled rules: see PARA 30 text and note 20), a provision previously contained in the Rules of the Supreme Court 1965 applies only to proceedings in the High Court and a provision previously contained in the County Court Rules 1981 applies only to proceedings in a county court, unless otherwise stated in CPR Schs 1, 2 or the relevant practice direction: see CPR 50(3)(c), (4) (c).

3 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19(3). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

4 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19(3)(a).

5 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19(3)(b). This is the classic way in which the statutory jurisdiction of the High Court or a judge of the High Court is made exercisable by a master or district judge. In the absence of a rule of court conferring such power on a master or district judge the jurisdiction may be exercised only by a High Court judge: see Barclays Bank Ltd v Moore [1967] 3 All ER 34, [1967] 1 WLR 1201, CA, where it was held that a master has no power to appoint a receiver; and Firman v Ellis [1978] QB 886 at 909, [1978] 2 All ER 851 at 863, CA, per Lord Denning MR, where it was held that only a judge had discretionary power to exclude time-limits in personal injury actions. As to the power of judges, masters and district judges to perform the functions of the court see CPR 2.4; and PARA 49; and as to the allocation of cases between different levels of the judiciary see Practice Direction--Allocation of Cases to Levels of Judiciary PD 2B; and PARA 50. For the like provisions relating to county courts see PARAS 61-62.

(4) FUNDING

23. Funding arrangements.

The cost of litigation can be very high, and the availability of funding for costs liability, which is unpredictable and potentially unlimited in amount, can be a crucial factor in the decision whether or not to litigate. An unsuccessful litigant will generally have to pay the winning party's costs as well as his own. Formerly, legal aid had been available to litigants who met the income criteria, but the cost of legal aid escalated as the costs of litigation did¹. The legal aid system has been replaced by funding arrangements², which have shifted the burden of legal costs from the government to those who have to meet the cost of litigation: normally, defendants' insurance companies³. Under the new system, lawyers are allowed to represent clients on the basis of a conditional fee agreement⁴ and the client normally takes out after-the-event insurance to cover the risk of having to pay the opponent's costs if the client is unsuccessful, and of liability for costs and expenses of the client's lawyers to the extent that they are not recoverable from the opponent if the client is successful⁵. This, however, has tended to cause a further escalation in costs⁶.

A detailed system is now in place⁷. Where a party has entered into a funding arrangement, it is important that the other parties are notified about the arrangement⁸.

1 For the history of the litigation funding legislation see Hollins v Russell [2003] EWCA Civ 718, [2003] 4 All ER 590 per Brooke LJ. See also LEGAL AID. As to costs generally see PARA 1729 et seq.

2 As to the meaning of 'funding arrangement' see PARA 1830. See further PARAS 1826-1836.

4 As to the meaning of 'conditional fee agreement' see PARA 1830 note 2. Formerly it was considered contrary to public policy that a solicitor's remuneration should depend on the outcome of the case: see Awwad v Geraghty & Co (a firm) [2001] QB 570, [2000] 1 All ER 608, CA; Thai Trading Co (a firm) v Taylor [1998] QB 781, [1998] 3 All ER 65, CA.

2. FRAMEWORK OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

24. Civil Procedure Rules.

Rules of Court, called the Civil Procedure Rules, govern the practice and procedure to be followed in the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal, in the High Court (other than in most proceedings in the Family Division¹) and in the county courts². For the first time, there are rules common to most civil proceedings in the courts exercising civil jurisdiction in England and Wales. Civil Procedure Rules may be made about any matters which were governed by the former Rules of the Supreme Court³ or the former County Court Rules⁴. They may provide for the exercise of the jurisdiction of any court whose practice and procedure is within the scope of the rules by court officers or staff⁵. Civil Procedure Rules may also provide for the removal of proceedings⁶ at any stage within the High Court⁷ or between county courts⁸, may modify the rules of evidence as they apply to proceedings in any court within the scope of the rules⁹ and apply any rules of court¹⁰ which relate to a court which is outside the scope of the rules¹¹. Any rules of court, not made by the Civil Procedure Rule Committee¹², which apply to proceedings of a particular kind in a court within the scope of Civil Procedure Rules may be applied by those rules to other proceedings in such a court¹³.

1 As to proceedings in the Family Division see PARAS 32 text and notes 13-14, 46; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS; MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW.

2 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1(1). A court the practice and procedure of which is governed by the Civil Procedure Rules is referred to in the 1997 Act as being 'within the scope' of the rules and references to a court 'outside the scope' are to be read accordingly: s 9(1). As to the application of the Civil Procedure Rules see further PARA 32. As to the making of the Civil Procedure Rules see PARAS 25-26.

3 Ie the Rules of the Supreme Court 1965, SI 1965/1776 (revoked subject to transitional provisions).

4 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1(2), Sch 1 para 1. The former County Court Rules referred to are the County Court Rules 1981, SI 1981/1687 (revoked subject to transitional provisions). The power to make Civil Procedure Rules includes power to make different provision for different cases or different areas, including different provision (1) for a specific court or specific division of a court; or (2) for specific proceedings, or a specific jurisdiction, specified in the rules: Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 7.

5 Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 2.

6 For these purposes, 'provide for the removal of proceedings' means (1) provide for transfer of proceedings; or (2) provide for any jurisdiction in any proceedings to be exercised (whether concurrently or not) elsewhere within the High Court or, as the case may be, by another county court without the proceedings being transferred (Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 3(2)(a)); and 'proceedings' includes any part of proceedings (Sch 1 para 3(2)(b)).

8 Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 3(1); and see PARA 68.

9 Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 4.

10 For these purposes, 'rules of court' includes any provision governing the practice and procedure of a court which is made by or under an enactment: Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 1 para 5(3). 'Enactment' includes

25. The Civil Procedure Rule Committee.

The Civil Procedure Rules are made by the Civil Procedure Rule Committee¹, which must exercise its power to make the rules with a view to securing that the civil justice system is accessible, fair and efficient². The membership of the Committee consists of the Head of Civil Justice³, the Deputy Head of Civil Justice (if there is one) and the persons currently appointed by the Lord Chief Justice and the Lord Chancellor⁴. In appointing the members of the Committee, the Lord Chief Justice must consult the Lord Chancellor⁵ and the Lord Chancellor must consult the Lord Chief Justice and, in certain cases, certain bodies⁶.

The Lord Chancellor may reimburse the members of the Civil Procedure Rule Committee their travelling and out-of-pocket expenses⁷.

1 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(1) (substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 261, 263(1), (2)). The Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 10, Sch 2 amends, inter alia, the Supreme Court Act 1981 and the County Courts Act 1984, effectively abolishing the Supreme Court Rule Committee and the County Court Rule Committee, established under those Acts: see the Civil Procedure Act 1997 Sch 2 paras 1, 2 (Sch 2 para 1 amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 106, Sch 15 Pt III). It is not within the power of a judge to vary the Civil Procedure Rules: see Bovale Ltd v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government [2009] EWCA Civ 171, [2009] All ER (D) 115 (Mar). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

2 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1(3). As to the overriding objective of the Civil Procedure Rules see CPR 1.1, 1.2; and PARA 33. As from a day to be appointed, any power to make Civil Procedure Rules is to be exercised with a view to securing that (1) the system of civil justice is accessible, fair and efficient; and (2) the rules are both simple and simply expressed: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1(3) (substituted, as from a day to be appointed, by the Courts Act 2003 s 82(1); and amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 ss 15(1), 146, Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 261, 262, Sch 18 Pt 2). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for the purposes of the substitution.

3 As to the Head of Civil Justice see PARA 12 note 5.

The Lord Chief Justice must appoint the persons falling within s 2(2)(a)-(d) (heads (1)-(4)), and the Lord Chancellor must appoint the persons falling within s 2(2)(e)-(g) (heads (5)-(7)): s 2(1A), (1B) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 263(2)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2: s 2(9) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 263(6)).

The persons to be appointed in accordance with the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(1A), (1B) are as follows (s 2(2) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 263(3)):

- 1 (1) either two or three judges of the Supreme Court (Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(2)(a) (substituted by the Courts Act 2003 s 83(2); and amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 2 para 4(1), (3), to substitute a reference to the Senior Courts for the reference to the Supreme Court; at the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed));

If the person falls within the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(2)(e) or (f) (head (5) or (6)), the Lord Chancellor must also consult any body which has members who are eligible for appointment under that provision and which is an authorised body for the purposes of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 27 or s 28: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(4).

The Lord Chancellor may by order amend s 2(2), (3) or (4), and make consequential amendments in any other provision of s 2: s 2A(1) (s 2A added by the Courts Act 2003 s 84; Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2A(1) amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 264(1), (2)). The Lord Chancellor may make such an order only with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2A(2) (as so added; substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 264(3)). Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/2. FRAMEWORK OF CIVIL PROCEDURE/(1) THE CIVIL PROCEDURE ACT 1997/26. Making Civil Procedure Rules.

26. Making Civil Procedure Rules.

Before making or amending Civil Procedure Rules the Civil Procedure Rule Committee must consult such persons as the committee considers appropriate and must meet, unless it is inexpedient to do so¹. The Committee must try to make rules which are both simple and simply expressed². The rules must be signed by at least eight members of the Committee and be submitted to the Lord Chancellor, who may allow or disallow them³. The rules must be contained in a statutory instrument⁴ and are subject to annulment by resolution of either House of Parliament⁵.

If the Lord Chancellor gives the Civil Procedure Rules Committee written notice that he thinks it is expedient for Civil Procedure Rules to include provision that would achieve a purpose specified in the notice, the Committee must make such rules as it considers necessary to achieve the specified purpose⁶. Those rules must be made within a reasonable period after the Lord Chancellor gives notice to the Committee and made in accordance with the above provisions⁷.

1 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(6) (s 2(6)-(8) repealed, as from a day to be appointed, by the Courts Act 2003 ss 85(1), 109(3), Sch 10). As to the Civil Procedure Rule Committee see PARA 25. It is not within the power of a judge to vary the Civil Procedure Rules: see Bovale Ltd v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government [2009] EWCA Civ 171, [2009] All ER (D) 115 (Mar).

2 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(7) (prospectively repealed: see note 1).

3 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 2(8) (prospectively repealed: see note 1). If the Lord Chancellor disallows rules, he must give the Civil Procedure Rule Committee written reasons for doing so: s 2(9) (sic) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 2 para 385(1), (2)). Rules so made and allowed come into force on such day as the Lord Chancellor may direct: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(1)(a). See also the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 19, Sch 7 para 4 (protected functions of the Lord Chancellor); and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

4 The Statutory Instruments Act 1946 applies to such a statutory instrument as if it contained rules made by a Minister of the Crown: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(1)(b). As to statutory instruments see further STATUTES vol 44(1) (Reissue) PARA 1501 et seq.

5 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(1)(b), (2).

As from a day to be appointed, s 3 is substituted by the Courts Act 2003 s 85(2), as follows. The Civil Procedure Rule Committee must, before making Civil Procedure Rules (1) consult such persons as they consider appropriate; and (2) meet (unless it is inexpedient to do so): Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(1) (as so substituted). Rules made by the Civil Procedure Rule Committee must be signed by a majority of the members of the Committee and submitted to the Lord Chancellor: s 3(2) (as so substituted). The Lord Chancellor may allow or disallow rules so made: s 3(3) (as so substituted; further substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 261, 265(1), (2)). If the Lord Chancellor disallows rules, he must give the Committee written reasons for doing so: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(4) (as so substituted and further substituted). Rules so made and allowed by the Lord Chancellor (a) come into force on such day as the Lord Chancellor directs; and (b) are to be contained in a statutory instrument to which the Statutory Instruments Act 1946 applies (see STATUTES vol 44(1) (Reissue) PARA 1501 et seq) as if the instrument contained rules made by a Minister of the Crown: s 3(5) (as so substituted; amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 265(3)). A statutory instrument containing Civil Procedure Rules is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 3(6) (as so substituted; amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 ss 15(1), 146, Sch 4 Pt 1 para 265(3), Sch 18 Pt 2).

27. Practice directions.

Instead of providing for any matter of practice and procedure, Civil Procedure Rules may refer to provision about that matter made or to be made by practice directions¹, which are defined as directions as to the practice and procedure of any court within the scope of the rules². Practice directions applicable to the Supreme Court have been made, in the exercise of their inherent jurisdiction, in respect of the practice and procedure in their respective divisions by the Lord Chief Justice as President of the Queen's Bench Division, by the Master of the Rolls as President of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal and by the Vice-Chancellor as vice-president of the Chancery Division³. Practice directions for the civil courts must now be made by the Lord Chief Justice with the approval of the Lord Chancellor or, if not made by the Lord Chief Justice, must be approved by him⁴. Practice directions may also provide for the removal or transfer of proceedings within the High Court between divisions or district registries or between county courts⁵.

1 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 1, Sch 1 para 6.

2 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 9(2). As to the meaning of 'within the scope of the rules' see PARA 24 note 2.

3 See Practice Direction [1999] 3 All ER 380, sub nom Practice Direction (Civil Litigation: Procedure) [1999] 1 WLR 1124, signed on 23 April 1999 by the Heads of Division and published in Civil Procedure Rules, Practice Directions, Pre-action Protocols and Forms vol 1 (HMSO, May 2001). Note that the Vice-Chancellor is now the Chancellor of the High Court: see PARA 43 note 1. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes.

4 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 5(1), (2) (s 5 substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 13(2), Sch 2 Pt 2 para 6); the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 2 Pt 1; and PARA 12 note 10. Such practice directions may be given in accordance with the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 2 Pt 1 or otherwise: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 5(1) (as so substituted); see PARA 12 note 10. Practice directions given otherwise than under that process may not be given without the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 5(2) (as so substituted). The power to give practice directions under s 5(1) includes power (1) to vary or revoke directions given by any person; (2) to give directions containing different provision for different cases (including different areas); (3) to give directions containing provision for a specific court, for specific proceedings or for a specific jurisdiction: s 5(4) (as so substituted). The requirement for the approval of the Lord Chancellor does not apply to directions to the extent that they consist of guidance about any of (a) the application or interpretation of the law; (b) the making of judicial decisions: s 5(5) (as so substituted). Nor does it apply to directions to the extent that they consist of criteria for determining which judges may be allocated to hear particular categories of case; but the directions may, to that extent, be given only after consulting the Lord Chancellor, and with the approval of the Lord Chief Justice: s 5(6) (as so substituted). It is not within the power of a judge to vary practice directions: see Bovale Ltd v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government [2009] EWCA Civ 171, [2009] All ER (D) 115 (Mar).

5 See the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 5(1), (3), Sch 1 para 3(1) (s 5 as substituted: see note 4). As to the meaning of 'provide for the removal of proceedings' and 'proceedings' see PARA 24 note 6. As to the transfer of proceedings see PARA 66 et seq.

29. Changes to enactments.

The Lord Chancellor may, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by order¹ amend, repeal or revoke any enactment² to the extent he considers necessary or desirable in consequence of the establishment of the Civil Procedure Rule Committee³ or of the making of the Civil Procedure Rules⁴ or of the rules themselves⁵. The Lord Chancellor may also, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by order⁶ amend, repeal or revoke any enactment passed or made before 27 April 1997⁷ to the extent he considers necessary or desirable in order to facilitate the making of Civil Procedure Rules⁸. Further, the Lord Chancellor may by order⁹ amend certain specified provisions of the Supreme Court Act 1981¹⁰ or of the County Courts Act 1984¹¹ which give the court power to order disclosure of documents where a claim may be made in respect of personal injury or death, so as to extend those provisions to circumstances where other claims may be made, or generally¹².

1 Any power to make an order under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 4 (see the text and notes 2-8) is exercisable by statutory instrument: s 4(3).

A statutory instrument containing an order under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 4(1) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 4(4). In the exercise of this power the Lord Chancellor has made the following Orders.

8 (1) The Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 2000, SI 2000/941, which came into force on 2 May 2000 (see art 1) and which amends the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 s 3(4) proviso, to provide that appeals from the Lands Tribunal in England and Wales to the Court of Appeal are no longer by way of case stated, following the making of a new rule for appeals in the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Rules 2000, SI 2000/221, r 19, Sch 5 (see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 2000, SI 2000/941, art 2).

9 (2) The Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 2001, SI 2001/2717, which came into force on 15 October 2001 (see art 1) and which amends the interpretation of 'prescribed' in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1927 s 25(1) so as to permit rules of court or a practice direction to prescribe the manner in which a claim is made under s 1(1) or 8(1) and an application is made or a certification given under s 3(1) (see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 2001, SI 2001/2717, arts 2, 3).

8 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 4(2) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 267(2)). In the exercise of this power the Lord Chancellor has made the following orders which modify certain enactments in order to facilitate the making of Civil Procedure Rules:

- 13 (1) The Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1998, SI 1998/2940, which came into force on 26 April 1999: see art 1. The changes made by the 1998 Order are: (a) to amend the Judgments Act 1838 s 17 (judgment debts to carry interest: see PARA 1149) to allow rules of court to prescribe the date from which interest on judgment debts should start to run and to allow the court, in accordance with rules of court, to disallow interest that would otherwise be payable on a judgment debt; (b) to amend the Law Reform (Husband and Wife) Act 1962 s 1 (actions in tort between husband and wife: see MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 72 (2009) PARA 211) to remove the requirement for rules of court to oblige the court to consider the stay of proceedings between husband and wife in an action in tort; (c) to amend the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 34 and the County Courts Act 1984 s 53 to extend to all proceedings the power of the court to order disclosure of documents against a non-party (see PARA 550); (d) to repeal the County Courts Act 1984 s 47 (specific right of a child to bring proceedings in the county court without a next friend in an action for wages due to him); (e) to amend s 63 (assessors) to bring the county court power to appoint assessors in line with that in the High Court (see PARAS 863, 1133); (f) to amend s 133 to remove the requirement that a certificate of service in the county court was to be signed by the individual officer responsible for service; and (g) to repeal s 134 (requirement to seal documents issuing out of the county court and provisions relating to the evidential status of such documents): see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1998, SI 1998/2940, arts 2-4, 5(b), 6(a), (c)-(f); and see further note 12.
- 14 (2) The Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1999, SI 1999/1217, which came into force on 26 April 1999: see art 1. The changes made by the 1999 Order are: (a) to change the reference to county court arbitration in the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 11 (lay representation) to a reference to the small claims procedure; and (b) to modify the Civil Evidence Act 1995 s 16 (commencement provisions) so as to enable that Act (which made new provision for the admissibility of hearsay evidence and the proof of documentary evidence) and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Rules to apply to cases begun before 31 January 1997 (the original commencement date of the 1995 Act): see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1999, SI 1999/1217, arts 2-4.

The Order (a) amends the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 to enable the special procedural privileges of the Crown as to the venue of civil proceedings (s 19), as to the transfer of civil proceedings from the county courts to the High Court (s 20) and as to rules of court to be made about the content of claim forms in civil proceedings against the Crown, and about default judgments, summary judgments and interrogatories (s 35) to be revoked on the addition of Part 66 to the CPR replacing CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 77 and CPR Sch 2 CCR Ord 42 (see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Crown Proceedings Act 1947) Order 2005, SI 2005/2712, art 2, Sch 1); and (b) makes consequential amendments to the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Crown Proceedings Act 1947) Order 2005, SI 2005/2712, art 3, Sch 2).

9 The power to make such an order is exercisable by statutory instrument subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 8(2).

10 Ie the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 33(2): see PARA 111. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

11 Ie the County Courts Act 1984 s 52(2): see PARA 111.

12 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 8(1) (amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 1 para 1(2) to refer to the Senior Courts Act 1981 instead of the Supreme Court Act 1981; at the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed). The Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1998, SI 1998/2940, which came into force on 26 April 1999 (see note 8 head (1)) is expressed to be made by the Lord Chancellor in exercise of his powers under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 4(2), but modifies the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 33(2) and the County Courts Act 1984 s 52(2) so as to extend to all proceedings the power of the court to order disclosure of documents against a potential party before proceedings have started (see PARA 111): see the Civil Procedure (Modification of Enactments) Order 1998, SI 1998/2940, arts 5(a), 6(b). It is apprehended that the 1998 Order was partly made in exercise of the power under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 8(1).

(2) THE CIVIL PROCEDURE RULES; GENERAL INTRODUCTION

30. General scheme and structure of the Civil Procedure Rules.

The Civil Procedure Rules 1998 came into force on 26 April 1999¹, replacing the Rules of the Supreme Court 1965 and the County Court Rules 1981². The rules are divided into Parts, each dealing with particular matters of practice and procedure and containing the individual rules. Most Parts are supplemented by practice directions, issued in the exercise of inherent powers and of powers under the Civil Procedure Act 1997³. The core practice and procedure for the majority of civil proceedings is governed by Parts 1 to 42 of the Civil Procedure Rules⁴. Parts 43 to 48 provide for costs⁵, Part 49 governs specialist proceedings⁶ and Part 51 makes transitional provisions⁷ and, with effect from 15 October 2001, provision that practice directions may modify or disapply any provision of the rules for specified periods, and in relation to proceedings in specified courts, during the operation of pilot schemes for assessing the use of new practices and procedures in connection with proceedings⁸. Part 52 governing appeals⁹ and Part 53 governing defamation claims¹⁰ came into force on 2 May 2000¹¹. Part 54 governing judicial review¹² came into force on 2 October 2000¹³. Part 55 governing possession proceedings¹⁴ and Part 56 governing landlord and tenant proceedings¹⁵ came into force on 15 October 2001¹⁶, as did Part 57 governing probate claims (other than non-contentious probate claims)¹⁷ and related matters¹⁸. For a time Part numbers 58 to 69 were left unused, but these Part numbers have now been allocated to other new rules governing specific types of procedure¹⁹.

Part 50 applies the Schedules to the rules, which reproduce and re-enact, in modified form, some of the Rules of the Supreme Court and the County Court Rules governing certain peripheral matters of practice and procedure which were not included in the original Civil Procedure Rules and subsequent amendments²⁰. Many of these matters are now governed by Civil Procedure Rules and the Scheduled rules have largely been superseded. Parts 70 to 73 of the rules, which came into force on 25 March 2002²¹, began this process by replacing some of the provisions of the Scheduled rules relating to the enforcement of judgments and orders. Part 70 contains general rules about enforcement. Parts 71 to 73 provide new procedures governing, respectively, orders to obtain information from judgment debtors (known as oral examinations under the earlier rules), third party debt orders (known as garnishee orders under the earlier rules), and charging orders, stop orders and stop notices. The previous rules are revoked and there are many consequential amendments²². A new Part 74, on the enforcement of judgments in different jurisdictions, was added as from 2 December 2002, and Part 75 on Traffic Enforcement as from 1 October 2002²³. Part 76, dealing with proceedings under the Prevention of Terrorism Act 2005, was introduced as from 11 March 2005²⁴; Part 77 making provision in support of criminal justice, came into force on 6 April 2008²⁵. The latest addition is Part 78, giving effect to the European order for payment and European small claims procedures with effect from 1 October 2008²⁶.

The Civil Procedure Rules apply in relation to the proceedings to which the Schedules apply subject to the provisions in the Schedules and the relevant practice directions: CPR 50(2). A provision previously contained in the Rules of the Supreme Court 1965 is headed 'RSC'; is numbered with the Order and rule numbers it bore as part of the RSC; and unless otherwise stated in the Schedules or the relevant practice direction, applies only to proceedings in the High Court: CPR 50(3). A provision previously contained in the County Court Rules 1981 is headed 'CCR'; is numbered with the Order and rule numbers it bore as part of the CCR; and unless otherwise stated in the Schedules or the relevant practice direction, applies only to proceedings in the county court: CPR

50(4). A reference in a Schedule to a rule by number alone is a reference to the rule so numbered in the Order in which the reference occurs: CPR 50(5). A reference in a Schedule to a rule by number prefixed by 'CPR' is a reference to the rule with that number in the Civil Procedure Rules: CPR 50(6). In the Schedules, unless otherwise stated, the 'Act' means (1) in a provision headed 'RSC', the Supreme Court Act 1981; and (2) in a provision headed 'CCR', the County Courts Act 1984: CPR 50(7). 31. Interpretation and Glossary.

Provision is made for the interpretation of certain terms in the Civil Procedure Rules¹. In addition, the Glossary at the end of the rules is a guide to the meaning of certain legal expressions used in the rules, but is not to be taken as giving those expressions any meaning in the rules which they do not have in the law generally².

Although the rules do not expressly so provide, the Interpretation Act 1978 applies for their interpretation³.

1 See CPR 2.3.

2 CPR 2.2(1). Words in the rules which are included in the Glossary are followed by '(GL)', with the exception of the words 'counterclaim', 'damages', 'practice form' and 'service', which appear frequently in the rules and are included in the Glossary but are not followed by '(GL)': see CPR 2.2(2), (3).

32. Application of the Civil Procedure Rules.

Subject to the exceptions set out below¹, the Civil Procedure Rules apply to all proceedings in county courts², the High Court³ and the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal⁴. They do not, however, apply to proceedings of the following kinds⁵, for which rules may be made under the specified enactments⁶, except to the extent that they are applied to those proceedings by another enactment⁷:

- 27 (1) insolvency proceedings, for which rules may be made under certain provisions of the Insolvency Act 1986⁸;
- 28 (2) non-contentious or common form probate proceedings, for which rules may be made under the Supreme Court Act 1981⁹;
- 29 (3) proceedings in the High Court when acting as a prize court, for which rules may be made under the Prize Courts Act 1894¹⁰;
- 30 (4) proceedings before the Court of Protection¹¹, for which rules may be made under the Mental Capacity Act 2005¹²;
- 31 (5) family proceedings, for which rules may be made under the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984¹³;
- 32 (6) adoption proceedings, for which rules may be made under the Adoption Act 1976 or the Adoption and Children Act 2002¹⁴;
- 33 (7) election petitions in the High Court, for which rules may be made under the Representation of the People Act 1983¹⁵.

(3) THE OVERRIDING OBJECTIVE

33. The overriding objective.

The Civil Procedure Rules state that they are a new procedural code¹. The effect of this provision is that previous case law, authorities and other legal material will not usually be applied but are, at most, only persuasive in interpreting and giving effect to the new provisions². This new code has the overriding objective of enabling the court³ to deal with cases justly⁴. Dealing with a case justly includes, so far as is practicable:

- 34 (1) ensuring that the parties are on an equal footing⁵;
- 35 (2) saving expense⁶;
- 36 (3) dealing with the case in ways which are proportionate:¹
 - 1. (a) to the amount of money involved⁷;
 - 2. (b) to the importance of the case⁸;
 - 3. (c) to the complexity of the issues⁹; and
 - 4. (d) to the financial position of each party¹⁰;
- 37 (4) ensuring that it is dealt with expeditiously and fairly¹¹; and
- 38 (5) allotting to it an appropriate share of the court's resources, while taking into account the need to allot resources to other cases¹².

As the terminology implies, the overriding objective governs every application of the rules¹³. It is, in part, in accordance with the requirement that the rules secure that the civil justice system is accessible, fair and efficient¹⁴. The parties are required to help the court to further the overriding objective¹⁵.

The underlying thought processes of previous decisions should not be completely thrown overboard; rather it is necessary to concentrate on the intrinsic justice of a particular case in the light of the overriding objective of the rules: Purdy v Cambran [1999] All ER (D) 1518, [1999] CPLR 843, CA; and see Amgulf Polymers & Chemicals Ltd v Owners and/or Demise Charterers of MV Athinoula [2001] 2 All ER (Comm) 821; Walsh v Misseldine [2000] All ER (D) 261, [2000] CPLR 201, CA. The right of a litigant to be represented by solicitors or advocate of choice is fundamental and well-established; that right is not removed by the 'level playing field' envisaged in CPR 1.1(2)(a) and the concept of proportionality in CPR 1.1(2)(c) (see head (3) in the text): Maltez v Lewis [1999] 21 LS Gaz R 39, [1999] All ER (D) 425.

The need for proportionality, particularly in defamation proceedings, had not gone unnoticed prior to the new rules, but CPR1.1 gives a new emphasis to that need: McPhilemy v Times Newspapers Ltd [1999] 3 All ER 775 at 793, CA, per Lord Woolf MR. On an application for permission to appeal, the disparity between the sum in issue and the costs involved in litigating that issue may be so great as to oblige the court, having regard to the overriding objective, to refuse a party the opportunity to litigate the matter further: see eg Naish v Bhardwaj [2001] All ER (D) 421 (Mar). As to appeals see PARA 1657 et seq.

Cf Gillingham v Gillingham [2001] EWCA Civ 906, [2001] 4 CPLR 355, where new evidence was admitted, in the light of the overriding objective, which would probably not have been admitted under the old rules. To allow parties to re-open arguments after draft judgments have been supplied, other than in exceptional circumstances, would be contrary to the overriding objective: Royal Brompton Hospital National Health Service Trust v Hammond [2001] EWCA Civ 778, 76 Con LR 62, [2001] All ER (D) 308 (May). See Bates v Microstar Ltd [2003] EWHC 661 (Ch), [2003] 22 LS Gaz R 30, [2003] All ER (D) 425 (Mar) (release of applicant from undertaking was appropriate and in furtherance of overriding objective to deal with all cases justly).

35. Active case management.

In order to further the overriding objective the court must actively manage cases¹. In exercising its duty to manage cases actively, the most important powers given to the court are those of:

- 39 (1) encouraging the parties to co-operate with each other in the conduct of the proceedings² and, in an appropriate case, to use an alternative dispute resolution procedure³;
- 40 (2) identifying the issues at an early stage⁴;
- 41 (3) deciding promptly which issues need full investigation and trial and which may be disposed of summarily⁵;
- 42 (4) deciding the order in which issues are to be resolved⁶;
- 43 (5) fixing timetables and otherwise controlling the progress of the case⁷.

Furthermore, the court may make orders on its own initiative⁸, as well as on the application of a party⁹.

1 CPR 1.4(1); and see PARA 246. As to the overriding objective see PARA 33; and as to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22. The overriding objective may be more likely to be furthered by actively managing a case with appropriate directions than by simply striking it out in circumstances where the claimant could then bring fresh proceedings: see Re Hoicrest Ltd, Keene v Martin [2000] 1 WLR 414, [2000] 1 BCLC 194, CA.

(4) CASE MANAGEMENT TRACKS

36. Case management tracks.

For the purposes of management of cases by the court, defended cases will be allocated to management tracks¹. These are:

- 44 (1) the small claims track²;
- 45 (2) the fast track³; and
- 46 (3) the multi-track⁴.

1 See CPR 26.1; CPR 26.5; and PARA 260 et seq.

2 See PARAS 37, 267, 274 et seq.

37. Scope of small claims track.

The small claims track is the normal track for:

- 47 (1) any claim for personal injuries¹ where:
 - 3 5. (a) the value of the claim is not more than £5,000²; and
 6. (b) the value of any claim for damages for personal injuries³ is not more than £1,000⁴;
- 4 48 (2) any claim which includes a claim by a tenant of residential premises against a landlord where:
 - 5 7. (a) the tenant is seeking an order requiring the landlord to carry out repairs or other work to the premises (whether or not the tenant is also seeking some other remedy)⁵;
 8. (b) the cost of the repairs or other work to the premises is estimated to be not more than £1,000⁶; and
 9. (c) the value of any other claim for damages is not more than £1,000⁷.

Subject to the above provision, the small claims track is the normal track for any claim which has a value of not more than £5,000⁸.

1 As to the meaning of 'claim for personal injuries' see PARA 19. 'Damages' means a sum of money awarded by the court as compensation to the claimant: CPR 2.2, Glossary. 3 For the purposes of CPR 26.6(1) 'damages for personal injuries' means damages claimed as compensation for pain, suffering and loss of amenity and does not include any other damages which are claimed: CPR 26.6(2).

38. Scope of the fast track.

The fast track is the normal track for any claim for which the small claims track is not the normal track¹ and which has a value for proceedings issued on or after 6 April 2009 of not more than £25,000 and for proceedings issued before 6 April 2009 of not more than £15,000², but only if the court considers that the trial is likely to last for no longer than one day³ and oral expert evidence at trial will be limited to (1) one expert per party in relation to any expert field⁴; and (2) expert evidence in two expert fields⁵.

39. Scope of the multi-track.

The multi-track is the normal track for any claim for which the small claims track or the fast track is not the normal track¹.

(5) CONSEQUENCES OF NON-COMPLIANCE

40. Consequences of non-compliance.

In order to ensure that parties comply with the Civil Procedure Rules, practice directions and orders of the court, the court has power to specify a number of different consequences¹. The court may:

- 49 (1) stay the whole or part of the proceedings or judgment, either generally or until a specified date²;
- 50 (2) make an order subject to conditions, including a condition to pay a sum of money into court, and specify the consequence of failure to comply with the order or condition³;
- 51 (3) order a party to pay a sum of money into court if that party has, without good reason, failed to comply with a rule, a practice direction or a relevant pre-action protocol⁴;
- 52 (4) order that a party's statement of case be struck out unless that party complies with an order giving directions for the conduct of the case⁵;
- 53 (5) strike out a party's statement of case, where there has been a failure to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order⁶;
- 54 (6) order a party to pay costs⁷.

1 See heads (1)-(7) in the text. As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 See CPR 3.1(2)(f); and PARA 247.

3 See CPR 3.1(3); and PARA 247.

4 See CPR 3.1(5); and PARA 247. In exercising this power, the court must have regard to the amount in dispute and the costs incurred or which may be incurred: CPR 3.1(6). As to pre-action protocols see PARA 107 et seq.

5 See CPR 3.1(3)(b), 3.5(1)(a); and PARA 521. As to statements of case see PARA 584.

41. Peremptory or 'unless' order; order subject to conditions.

The court¹ may make an order (a peremptory or an 'unless' order) that a specified act is required to be done within a specified time, making it a condition of the order that, unless it is complied with within the time specified, a specified consequence will follow², such as that the action will be dismissed or a statement of case will be struck out, following which a judgment may be entered for the other party. Even before the introduction of the Civil Procedure Rules ('CPR'), the court had jurisdiction to make an order by which the court could specify in advance the consequences of non-compliance with procedural requirements³, and this jurisdiction is recognised in the new procedure⁴. The consequences of failure to comply with an 'unless' order take effect automatically⁵.

The court may also make an order subject to conditions, including a condition to pay a sum of money into court⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

4 See CPR 3.1(3)(b). See PARA 247.

5 This is because CPR 3.8(1) (see PARA 255) provides that where a party has failed to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order, any sanction for failure to comply imposed by the rule, practice direction or court order has effect unless the party in default applies for and obtains relief from the sanction: Marcan Shipping (London) Ltd v Kefalas [2007] EWCA Civ 463, [2007] 3 All ER 365. As to relief see PARA 42.

42. Relief from consequences of non-compliance.

A party may seek relief from any sanction imposed by a rule, practice direction or court order but, once a party has failed to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order, the sanction takes effect and remains in place until relief is obtained¹. A party may obtain relief from an order for costs applied as a sanction only by appealing against the order for costs and not by applying for relief to the court which made the order². In deciding whether to grant relief, the court will consider all the circumstances of the case, including certain specific matters, for example whether the failure to comply was caused by the party or by his legal representative³.

ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(1) JURISDICTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT/43. Distribution of business among Divisions of the High Court.

3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS

(1) JURISDICTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT

43. Distribution of business among Divisions of the High Court.

The distribution of business in the High Court among the Divisions¹ is designed with a view to promoting the more convenient and speedy dispatch of business, and recognises that certain disputes demand specialist knowledge or experience and should be dealt with by judges who are specialists in the particular field or branch of law². Nevertheless, the unitary character of the High Court is underscored by the provision that without prejudice to the provisions of the Supreme Court Act 1981 relating to the distribution of business in the High Court, all the jurisdiction vested in the High Court under that Act may be exercised by all the Divisions alike³. Moreover, subject to rules of court, the fact that a cause or matter commenced in the High Court falls within a class of business assigned by or under that Act to a particular Division does not make it obligatory for it to be allocated or transferred to that Division⁴.

Subject to the provisions made by or under the 1981 Act or any other Act⁵, the business of the High Court is distributed among the Divisions in accordance with the statutory provisions in force regulating such distribution⁶. This provision is subject also to rules of court made to provide for the distribution of business in the High Court among the Divisions⁷, and to orders made by the Lord Chief Justice with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor directing (1) that any non-assigned business of the High Court be assigned to a specified Division⁸; (2) that any business assigned to one Division be assigned to another specified Division⁹; and (3) that the statutory assignment of the business of the High Court¹⁰ be amended so far as necessary in consequence of provision made under head (1) or head (2) above¹¹. Rules of court and orders made by the Lord Chief Justice may assign business of any description to two or more Divisions concurrently¹²; and rules of court may provide for the distribution of business in any Division among the judges of that Division other than business required to be heard by a Divisional Court¹³.

1 There are three Divisions of the High Court, namely (1) the Chancery Division, consisting of the Chancellor of the High Court, who is its president, and such of the puisne judges as are for the time being attached to it (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(1)(a) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 114, 118(1), (2))); (2) the Queen's Bench Division, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice, the President of the Queen's Bench Division, the vice-president of the Queen's Bench Division and such of the puisne judges as are for the time being attached to it (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(1)(b) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 118(3))); and (3) the Family Division, consisting of the President of the Family Division and such of the puisne judges as are for the time being attached to it (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(1)(c)). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

The Chancery Division includes (a) the Patents Court (see s 6(1)(a); and PATENTS AND REGISTERED DESIGNS vol 79 (2008) PARA 637 et seq); (b) the Bankruptcy Court (see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 764 et seq); and (c) the Companies Court (see generally COMPANIES). Patents and other intellectual property claims are dealt with under CPR Pt 63: see COPYRIGHT, DESIGN RIGHT AND RELATED RIGHTS; PATENTS AND REGISTERED DESIGNS. Proceedings in the Companies Court are designated 'specialist proceedings' by the Civil Procedure Rules: see CPR 49(1), (2); Practice Direction--Applications under the Companies Acts and Related Legislation PD 49; and PARA 1547. Insolvency proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court are not specialist proceedings for the purposes of CPR Pt 49 and are governed by the Insolvency Rules 1986, SI 1986/1925: see

The Chancery Guide (2005 Edn) para 19.1; and Practice Direction--Insolvency Proceedings in The Civil Court Practice.

The Queen's Bench Division includes (i) the Admiralty Court (see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 6(1)(b); and SHIPPING AND MARITIME LAW vol 93 (2008) PARA 85 et seq); (ii) the Commercial Court (see s 6(1)(b); and PARA 1536 et seq); and (iii) the Technology and Construction Court (see PARA 1546). Proceedings in these are governed by CPR Pt 61, CPR Pt 58 and CPR Pt 60 respectively. Mercantile courts have been introduced and procedure in them is governed by CPR Pt 59: see PARA 1545. There is also an Administrative Court which hears claims for judicial review falling within CPR Pt 54: see PARA 1530; and JUDICIAL REVIEW vol 61 (2010) PARA 659 et seq. As to the establishment of the Administrative Court see PARA 219 text and note 8.

2 The puisne judges of the High Court are attached to the various Divisions by direction given by the Lord Chief Justice after consulting the Lord Chancellor: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(2) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 118(4)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under this provision: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(6) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 118(6)). However, any judge attached to any Division may act as an additional judge of any other Division at the request of the Lord Chief Justice made with the concurrence of both the senior judge of the Division to which the judge is attached and the senior judge of the Division of which the judge is to act as an additional judge (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(3) (amended by the Court and Legal Services Act 1990 s 125(2), Sch 17 para 12; and the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 118(5))); and a judge of any Division may sit, whenever required, in a Divisional Court of another Division or for any judge of another Division (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(4)). Vacation judges sit regardless of Divisions: see PARA 65. Any High Court judge has jurisdiction to try any action (now known as a 'claim': see PARA 18) which has been wrongly assigned to the Division in which he sits: Pinney v Hunt(1877) 6 ChD 98; The Recepta[1893] P 255, CA; Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v British Bank for Foreign Trade Ltd[1921] 2 AC 438, HL; Midland Bank Ltd v Stamps[1978] 3 All ER 1, [1978] 1 WLR 635.

3 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 5(5), re-enacting the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 4(4) (repealed) (added by the Administration of Justice Act 1928 s 6 (repealed)), which was intended to override the decision in The Sheaf Brook[1926] P 61, CA. The Lord Chief Justice may, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor by order reassign business from one Division to another under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(3) (b): see the text and note 9. An order of any Division or court of the High Court is the order of the High Court and not an order of a particular Division or court: see Re Hastings (No 3) [1959] Ch 368, [1959] 1 All ER 698, DC.

8 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(3)(a) (s 61(3) amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 129(1), (2)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(3): s 61(9) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 129(3)). Any order under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(3) must be made by statutory instrument, which must be laid before Parliament after being made: s 61(8). For examples of such orders see the High Court (Distribution of Business) Order 1991, SI 1991/1210 (assigning certain proceedings to the Family Division); the High Court (Distribution of Business) Order 1993, SI 1993/622 (assigning proceedings under the Child Support Act 1991 to the Family Division); and the High Court (Distribution of Business) Order 2004, SI 2004/3418 (assigning all proceedings in the High Court under the Gender Recognition Act 2004 ss 6, 8 to the Family Division).

9 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(3)(b) (as amended: see note 8). See also note 8. No such order may be made without the concurrence of the senior judge of the Division or each Division to which the business is assigned (s 61(5)(a)) and of the Division or each Division to which the business is to be assigned (s 61(5)(b)). Section 61(3)(b) in substance re-enacts the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 57(1) (repealed), under which the Lord Chancellor has directed that any Division to which a cause or matter is assigned is to have jurisdiction to grant in that cause or matter any remedy or relief arising out of or related to or connected with any claim made in the cause or matter notwithstanding that proceedings for that remedy or relief are assigned to another Division: Practice Direction[1973] 2 All ER 233, [1973] 1 WLR 627. In Midland Bank Ltd v Stamps[1978] 3 All ER 1, [1978] 1 WLR 635, an action by the bank for repayment of a loan secured by a charge on real property was retained in the Commercial Court as a commercial action notwithstanding the assignment of mortgage actions to the Chancery Division. Actions are now known as 'claims': see PARA 18.

ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(1) JURISDICTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT/44. Assignment of proceedings to the Chancery Division.

44. Assignment of proceedings to the Chancery Division.

To the Chancery Division are assigned by the Supreme Court Act 1981 all causes and matters¹ relating to:

- 55 (1) the sale², exchange or partition of land³, or the raising of charges on land⁴;
- 56 (2) the redemption or foreclosure of mortgages⁵;
- 57 (3) the execution of trusts⁶;
- 58 (4) the administration of the estates of deceased persons⁷;
- 59 (5) bankruptcy⁸;
- 60 (6) the dissolution of partnerships or the taking of partnership or other accounts⁹;
- 61 (7) the rectification, setting aside or cancellation of deeds or other instruments in writing¹⁰;
- 62 (8) probate business¹¹, other than non-contentious or common form business¹²;
- 63 (9) patents¹³, trade marks, registered designs,¹⁴ copyright¹⁵ or design right¹⁶;
- 64 (10) the appointment of a guardian of a minor's estate¹⁷.

Also assigned to the Chancery Division are all causes and matters involving the exercise of the jurisdiction of the High Court under the enactments relating to companies¹⁸.

The assignment of statutory appeals and other miscellaneous appeals and applications to the Chancery Division under the Civil Procedure Rules is discussed elsewhere in this title¹⁹.

1 For the purposes of the Supreme Court Act 1981, 'cause' means any action or any criminal proceedings and 'matter' means any proceedings in court not a cause: see s 151(1). However, the new civil procedure (see PARA 24 et seq) no longer employs this terminology: see PARA 18. The causes and matters here assigned by the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(1), Sch 1 para 1 (as amended: see note 16) are by no means coincident or coextensive with the former equity jurisdiction, but are much less: see Rogers v Jones (1877) 7 ChD 345, CA. Moreover, subject to the power of transfer under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 65 and rules of court (see CPR 30.5; and PARA 67), any common law action (now known as a 'claim') may be brought in the Chancery Division: see Warner v Murdoch, Murdoch v Warner (1877) 4 ChD 750, CA (a jury trial cannot be held in the Chancery Division). ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(1) JURISDICTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT/45. Assignment of proceedings to the Queen's Bench Division.

45. Assignment of proceedings to the Queen's Bench Division.

To the Queen's Bench Division are assigned by the Supreme Court Act 1981¹:

- 65 (1) applications for writs of habeas corpus², except applications made by a parent or guardian of a minor for such a writ concerning the custody of the minor³;
- 66 (2) applications for judicial review⁴;
- 67 (3) all control order proceedings (within the meaning of the Prevention of Terrorism Act 2005)⁵;
- 68 (4) all causes and matters involving the exercise of the Admiralty jurisdiction of the High Court⁶ or its jurisdiction as a prize court⁷; and
- 69 (5) all causes and matters entered in the commercial list⁸.

The assignment of statutory appeals and other miscellaneous appeals and applications to the Queen's Bench Division under the Civil Procedure Rules is discussed elsewhere in this title⁹.

1 The list in the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(1), Sch 1 para 2 is far from being exhaustive, and does not accurately reflect the actual business conducted in the Queen's Bench Division, which is the lineal successor of the original superior courts of common law, namely the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster and the Court of Exchequer, both as a Court of Revenue and as a common law court: see the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 18(2) (repealed). It thus exercises the entire range of common law jurisdiction, embracing all the branches of the common law except that which was exercised by the High Court of Chancery. Powers of judge, master, district judge or court officer to perform court functions and acts.

49. Powers of judge, master, district judge or court officer to perform court functions and acts.

Where the Civil Procedure Rules provide for the court to perform any act then, except where an enactment, rule or practice direction provides otherwise, that act may be performed in relation to proceedings in the High Court, by any judge, master or district judge of that court¹. Accordingly, in those rules, 'judge', unless the context otherwise requires, means a judge, master or district judge or a person authorised to act as such².

Where those rules require or permit the court to perform an act of a formal or administrative character, that act may be performed by a court officer³. However, a requirement that a court officer carry out any act at the request of a party is subject to the payment of any fee required by a fees order for the carrying out of that act⁴.

ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(1) JURISDICTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT/50. Allocation of cases between levels of judiciary and to particular masters.

50. Allocation of cases between levels of judiciary and to particular masters.

The Civil Procedure Rules set out, by supplementary practice direction, the matters over which masters and district judges (including deputies) in the Queen's Bench and Chancery Divisions do not have jurisdiction or which they may deal with only on certain conditions¹.

The practice direction provides that, in relation to injunctions²:

- 90 (1) search orders³, freezing orders⁴ and any ancillary information orders⁵ and orders authorising a person to enter land to recover, inspect or sample property⁶ may only be made by a judge⁷;
- 91 (2) injunctions and orders relating to specific performance where these involve an injunction must be made by a judge unless:
- 9 (a) the terms of the injunction are agreed by the parties⁸;
- 14. (b) the injunction is made in connection with or ancillary to a charging order⁹;
- 15. (c) the injunction is made in connection with or ancillary to an order appointing a receiver by way of equitable execution¹⁰; or
- 16. (d) the injunction is made in proceedings for an order restraining a person from receiving a sum due from the Crown¹¹.
- 10

A master or district judge may, however, make an order varying or discharging an injunction or undertaking given to the court if all parties to the proceedings have consented to the variation or discharge¹².

In relation to other pre-trial orders and interim remedies, the practice direction provides that a master or district judge may not make orders or grant interim remedies:

- 92 (i) relating to the liberty of the subject¹³;
- 93 (ii) relating to criminal proceedings or matters except procedural applications in appeals to the High Court (including appeals by case stated) under any enactment¹⁴;
- 94 (iii) relating to a claim for judicial review (though interim applications in claims for judicial review may be made to masters of the Queen's Bench Division)¹⁵;
- 95 (iv) relating to appeals from masters or district judges¹⁶;
- 96 (v) in appeals against costs assessments¹⁷, except on an appeal¹⁸ against the decision of an authorised court officer in detailed assessment proceedings¹⁹;
- 97 (vi) in applications by a person subject to a civil or criminal or an all proceedings order (vexatious litigant) for permission to start or continue proceedings²⁰;
- 98 (vii) in applications under the Mental Health Act 1983 for permission to bring proceedings against a person²¹.

A master or district judge may, subject to any practice direction, try a case which is treated as allocated to the multi-track because it is proceeding under Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules (the alternative procedure for claims)²² but may try a case which has been allocated to the multi-track under Part 26 only with the consent of the parties²³.

Any such restrictions on the trial jurisdiction of masters and district judges do not prevent them from hearing applications for summary judgment or, if the parties consent, for the determination of a preliminary issue²⁴. They may also assess the damages or sum due to a party under a judgment without limit as to the amount²⁵.

In proceedings in the Chancery Division, a master or district judge may not deal with a number of specified matters without the consent of the Chancellor²⁶ and may only give directions for early trial after consulting the judge in charge of the relevant list²⁷. Where, however, a winding-up order has been made against a company, any proceedings against the company by or on behalf of debenture holders may be dealt with, at the Royal Courts of Justice, by a registrar and, in a district registry with insolvency jurisdiction, by a district judge²⁸.

A deputy High Court judge, a master or a district judge may not try a case in a claim made in respect of a judicial act under the Human Rights Act 1998 or a claim for a declaration of incompatibility in accordance with the relevant provision²⁹ of that Act³⁰.

The Senior Master and the Chief Master will make arrangements for proceedings to be assigned to individual masters. They may vary such arrangements generally or in particular cases, for example, by transferring a case from a master to whom it had been assigned to another master³¹. The fact that a case has been assigned to a particular master does not prevent another master from dealing with that case if circumstances require, whether at the request of the assigned master or otherwise³².

Wherever a master or district judge has jurisdiction, he may refer the matter to a judge instead of dealing with it himself³³.

1 See Practice Direction--Allocation of Cases to Levels of Judiciary PD 2B, which does not deal with proceedings in the Family Division except in relation to those matters where the Family Division has joint jurisdiction with the Chancery Division: see para 3.2. In such cases district judges (including district judges of the Principal Registry) have jurisdiction, subject to any direction given by the President of the Family Division: para 3.2. Examples of such proceedings are proceedings under the Inheritance (Provision for Family and Dependants) Act 1975 or under the Trusts of Land and Appointment of Trustees Act 1996 s 14.

For these purposes, references to masters and district judges include deputies: Practice Direction--Allocation of Cases to Levels of Judiciary PD 2B para 1.1.

4 Ie under CPR 25.1(1)(f): see PARAS 315 head (6) in the text, 318, 396 et seq. Where the court has made a freezing order under CPR 25.1(f) and has ordered a person to make a witness statement or affidavit about his assets and to be cross-examined on its contents, unless the judge directs otherwise, the cross-examination will take place before a master or a district judge, or if the master or district judge directs, before an examiner of the court: Practice Direction--Allocation of Cases to Levels of Judiciary PD 2B para 7. As to the meaning of 'witness statement' see PARA 751 note 1; and as to the meaning of 'affidavit' see PARA 540 note 5. (2) THE CENTRAL OFFICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

51. The Central Office of the Supreme Court.

In 1879, as part of an extensive reorganisation of the Supreme Court, the Central Office was established¹. The Central Office performs such business as the Lord Chief Justice may, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, direct². The relevant practice direction provides for the division of the Central Office into departments and for the distribution of Central Office business among such departments in such manner as is set out in *The Queen's Bench Division Guide*³.

1 Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act 1879 s 4 (repealed). Many offices were amalgamated with, and many court officers were transferred to, the Central Office by ss 5, 6 (repealed). These provisions were repealed and replaced by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 104, Sch 6, which in turn has been repealed by the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 152(4), Sch 7. The present position is governed by s 96 (see the text and note 2), which assumes the continued existence of the Central Office. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

The Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act 1879 placed the control and superintendence of the Central Office substantially under the masters of the Superior Common Law Courts, and this power was continued under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 104(2), but this provision was repealed by the Courts Act 1971 s 56(4), Sch 11 Pt IV.

2 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 96(1) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 114, 141(1), (2); and amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 4 para 26(1), (2) to substitute 'Senior Courts' for 'Supreme Court'; at the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed). Subject to any direction under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 96(1), the Central Office is to perform such business as it performed immediately before 1 January 1982 (ie the commencement date of the Supreme Court Act 1981: see s 153(2)): s 96(2) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 141(3)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 96: s 96(3) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 141(4)).

3 See Practice Direction--Court Offices PD 2A para 1. The Central Office comprises the following departments: (1) the Action Department, which deals with the issue of claims, responses to claims, admissions, undefended and summary judgments, enforcement, drawing up of certain orders, public searches, provision of copies of court documents, enrolment of deeds, submission of references to the European Court of Justice and registration of foreign judgments; (2) the Masters' Secretary's Department, which covers three discrete areas of work: (a) the Masters' Support Unit which provides support (i) to the masters, including assisting with case-management, and (ii) to the Senior Master; (b) foreign process; and (c) investment of children's funds; (3) the Queen's Bench Associates' Department; (4) the Clerk of the Lists, who lists all trials and matters before the judges; (5) the Registry of the Technology and Construction Court; (6) the Admiralty and Commercial Registry: see The Queen's Bench Guide (2007 Edn) paras 1.6.3-1.6.5, 1.6.7. The Queen's Bench Associates sit in court with the judges during trials and certain interim hearings. The chief associate manages the Queen's Bench Associates and also provides support to the Senior Master as the Queen's Remembrancer. The associates draw up the orders made in court at trial and those interim orders that the parties do not wish to draw up themselves or which are directed by a master to be drawn by the court: para 1.6.6. One of the staff of the Masters' Secretary's Department acts as the chief clerk to the prescribed officer for election petitions (the Senior Master): see para 1.6.5.

The Lord Chancellor may, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by order, made by statutory instrument¹, direct that there are to be district registries of the High Court at such places and for such districts as are specified in the order².

There is a district registry for every part of England and Wales except in the London area³.

55. District judges.

The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, may assign a district judge¹ to one or more district registries² and may change an assignment so as to assign the district judge to a different district registry or registries (or to no district registry)³. While a district judge is assigned to one or more district registries he is a district judge of the High Court⁴.

Every district judge is, by virtue of his office, capable of acting in any district registry whether or not assigned to it, but may do so only in accordance with arrangements made by or on behalf of the Lord Chief Justice⁵.

1 Formerly called a 'district registrar': see the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 74(1). The district judges perform the work carried out by the masters in the Royal Courts of Justice.

2 As to district registries see PARA 54.

3 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 100 (1) (s 100 substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 14, Sch 3 para 2(1)). As to county court district judges see PARA 60. A reference in any enactment or other instrument to the district judge of a district registry is a reference to any district judge assigned to the registry concerned: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 100 (2) (as so substituted). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 100(1): s 100(5) (added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 s 56, Sch 11 paras 1, 2). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

4 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 100 (4) (as substituted: see note 3). Section 100 applies to a district judge holding office by virtue of an appointment made before the commencement of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 3 para 2(1) (ie before 3 April 2006: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 (Commencement No 5) Order 2006, SI 2006/1014) as if he had been assigned to the district registry or registries for which he was appointed: Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 3 para 2(2).

56. Deputy district judges.

If it appears to the Lord Chancellor expedient in order to facilitate the disposal of business in the High Court, he may appoint a person¹ to be a deputy district judge². The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, may assign a deputy district judge to one or more district registries³ and may change an assignment so as to assign the deputy district judge to a different district registry or registries (or to no district registry)⁴; and a deputy district judge assigned to a district registry has, while acting under his assignment, the same jurisdiction as a district judge assigned to that registry⁵.

1 A person is qualified for appointment as a deputy district judge only if the person (1) is qualified for appointment as a district judge; or (2) holds, or has held, the office of district judge: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1A) (s 102(1A)-(1C) added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 s 56, Sch 11 paras 1, 3(1), (2)). The Lord Chancellor may not appoint a person as a deputy district judge without the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice if the person (a) holds the office of district judge; or (b) ceased to hold the office of district judge within two years ending with the date when the appointment takes effect: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1B) (as so added). The Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 85 (selection of certain office holders) does not apply to an appointment to which the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1B) applies: s 102(1C) (as so added). No appointment to which s 102(1B) applies may be such as to extend beyond the day on which the person in question attains the age of 75: see s 102(3) (amended by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 3(3)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1B) or (4A): s 102(5A) (added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 3(5)). As to county court district judges see PARA 60. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

2 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1) (substituted by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 3(2)). A deputy district judge was formerly called a 'deputy district registrar': see the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 74(1). Any appointment to the office of deputy district judge in exercise of the function under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1) must be made, by virtue of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 85, Sch 14 Pt 2 (amended by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 ss 56, 146, Sch 11 para 15, Sch 23 Pt 1), in accordance with the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 ss 85-93, 96: see COURTS. The Lord Chancellor's function under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(1) is a protected function for the purposes of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 19: see s 19(5), Sch 7 para 4. See further CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

3 As to district registries see PARA 54.

4 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(4A) (s 102(4A)-(4C) added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 3(4)). Every deputy district judge so appointed is, by virtue of his office, capable of acting as a district judge in any district registry to which he is not assigned, but may act in a district registry to which he is not assigned only in accordance with arrangements made by or on behalf of the Lord Chief Justice: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 102(4C) (as so added). As to the effect of this amendment see the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 4. The Lord Chancellor may pay a deputy district judge such remuneration and allowances out of money provided by Parliament as, with the concurrence of the Minister for the Civil Service, the Lord Chancellor determines: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 91(6), applied by s 102(5) (substituted by the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 s 31(3), Sch 8 para 15(3)). Notwithstanding the expiry of the period of his appointment, a deputy district judge may validly continue to deal with, give judgment in or deal with any ancillary matter relating to any case with which he was concerned during that period: see the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 s 27(1).

57. Procedure in the district registries.

Under the old rules¹ it was expressly provided that the procedure of the Central Office² was to apply in the district registries. The Civil Procedure Rules make no such express provision; however it is to be assumed that the procedure set out in the practice guides of the Queen's Bench and Chancery Divisions³ and in the Family Proceedings Rules 1991⁴ and practice directions applies as appropriate in the district registries.

Every district registry must be open on the days and during the hours that the Lord Chancellor from time to time directs and, in the absence of any such directions, must be open on the same days and during the same hours as the county court offices of which it forms part are open⁵.

(4) COUNTY COURTS

58. In general.

County courts are creatures of statute¹. As such, the jurisdiction exercised by county court judges and officers derives from the County Courts Act 1984 and the Civil Procedure Rules. It is, however, now established that county courts have inherent jurisdiction².

England and Wales is divided into districts and a county court is held for each district at one or more places in it, each court having such jurisdiction and powers as are conferred by the County Courts Act 1984 and any other enactment for the time being in force³. A county court is a court of record and has a seal⁴. The Lord Chancellor may, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by order specify places at which county courts are to be held and the name by which the court held at any place so specified is to be known⁵. The City of London is a county court district⁶ and the county court for that district is known as the Mayor's and City of London Court⁷.

Provision is made for public buildings, other than buildings erected before 1 January 1889 for the purpose of holding and carrying on the business of a county court, to be used for the purpose of holding the court, provided that the court sittings are arranged so as not to interfere with the business of the local or any other public authority usually transacted in such a building⁸.

For many types of proceedings, the High Court and county courts have concurrent jurisdiction and there are now rules common to most civil proceedings in these courts⁹. County courts do not, however, have the power to grant search orders¹⁰ and have the power to grant freezing injunctions only in limited circumstances¹¹. These orders can, however, generally be granted in the patents county court and in the Central London County Court business list. Where the county court has no jurisdiction to make the order, proceedings are transferred to the High Court for the purposes of the application and then transferred back to the county court¹².

A county court cannot make a declaration of incompatibility in accordance with the Human Rights Act 1998¹³.

The decision as to whether a claim should be commenced in the High Court or a county court depends on such factors as the complexity of the case, whether it is likely to raise difficult questions of law or fact, the monetary value of the claim and the importance of its outcome to the general public¹⁴. Additionally, there are a number of statutory and other restrictions on where proceedings may be started. Provisions relating to where proceedings may be commenced are discussed elsewhere in this title¹⁵.

A claimant who brings proceedings in the High Court which should have been commenced in a county court is likely to be penalised in costs¹⁶.

The location of the court used is generally determined by convenience, that of the parties and their solicitors. However, if the case is defended, the court will give first consideration to the convenience of the defendant¹⁷. In the case of proceedings seeking possession of property, these must be commenced in the county court serving the district in which the property is situated¹⁸.

3 County Courts Act 1984 s 1(1) (amended by the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 10, Sch 2 para 2(1), (4)). Nothing in this provision affects the operation of the Courts Act 1971 s 42 (City of London: see the text and notes 6-7): County Courts Act 1984 s 1(3).

4 County Courts Act 1984 s 1(2). As to courts of record see generally COURTS.

5 County Courts Act 1984 s 2(1) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 160, 161(1), (2)). Such order must be made by statutory instrument which must be laid before Parliament after being made: County Courts Act 1984 s 2(2). Subject to any alterations made by virtue of s 2, county courts continue to be held for the districts and at the places and by the names appointed on 1 August 1984 (the commencement date of the County Courts Act 1984: see s 150): s 2(4). The districts for which county courts are to be held are to be determined in accordance with directions given, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by or on behalf of the Lord Chancellor: s 2(3) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 161(3)). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the County Courts Act 1984 s 2(1) or (3): s 2(5) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 4 Pt 1 para 161(4)).

By virtue of the County Courts Act 1984 s 2(4) and the Interpretation Act 1978 s 17(2)(b), the Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713 (as amended: see PARA 54 note 3) has effect as if made under these provisions. Article 6(1), Sch 3 col 1 lists the places at which there is a county court. The name of every place so specified is the name of the county court at that place except where the contrary is specified in art 6(2), Sch 4: art 6(2). Where the word 'Divorce' appears in Sch 3 col 2 opposite a place name in Sch 3 col 1, the county court at that place is designated as a divorce county court and that county court is also designated as a court of trial: see art 7. Where the words 'Civil Partnership' appear in Sch 3 col 2 opposite a place name in Sch 3 col 1, the county court at that place is designated for the purpose of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 s 36A as a civil partnership proceedings county court and that county court is also designated as a court of trial: Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713, art 8 (added by SI 2005/2923). The county court at a place named in the Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713, Sch 3 col 1 is excluded from having jurisdiction under the Insolvency Act 1986 Pts I-XI (ss 1-385) if the word 'Bankruptcy' does not appear in the Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713, Sch 3 col 2 opposite the name of the place and the district of a county court excluded from having such jurisdiction is attached for the purposes of that jurisdiction to the bankruptcy county court named in Sch 3 col 4 opposite the name of the place at which the court is situated: see art 9 (amended by SI 2007/786). Where the words 'Race Relations' appear in the Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713, Sch 3 col 2 opposite a place named in Sch 3 col 1, the county court at that place is designated for the purposes of the Race Relations Act 1976 and the district of a county court not so designated for those purposes is assigned for race relations purposes to the race relations county court named in the Civil Courts Order 1983, SI 1983/713, Sch 3 col 5 opposite the name of the place at which the court is situated: see art 10. There are some 240 county courts in total.

Certain county courts are authorised to hear mercantile claims (see PARA 1545), Technology and Construction Court claims (subject to certain restrictions: see PARA 1546) and patents and other specialist proceedings (see PARA 1547).

Each county court has at least one office for the conduct of court business, which must generally be open to the public from 10 am to 4 pm or such other hours as the Lord Chancellor may from time to time direct: see Practice Direction--Court Offices PD 2A paras 3.1, 3.3. Every county court office, or if a court has two or more offices at least one of those offices, must be open on every day of the year except (1) Saturdays and Sundays; (2) the day before Good Friday from noon onwards and Good Friday; (3) the Tuesday after the Spring bank holiday; (4) Christmas Day and, if that day is a Friday or Saturday, then 28 December; (5) bank holidays; and (6) such other days as the Lord Chancellor may direct: para 3.2(1). For these purposes, 'bank holiday' means a bank holiday in England and Wales under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 and 'spring bank holiday' means the bank holiday on the last Monday in May or any day appointed instead of that day under s 1(2): Practice Direction--Court Offices PD 2A para 3.2(2). As to bank holidays see further TIME vol 97 (2010) PARA 321.

The districts of district registries are generally defined by reference to county court districts: see PARA 54 note 3.

6 See the Courts Act 1971 s 42(2).

7 See the Courts Act 1971 s 42(3).

8 See the County Courts Act 1984 s 4.

9 As to the new civil procedure see PARA 24 et seq. The Civil Procedure Rules do not apply to most family proceedings: see PARA 32.

Subject to the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 4A (see PARA 116 note 4); to art 5 (see PARA 116 note 5); to art 6 (which provides that applications and appeals under the Audit Commission Act 1998 ss 17, 18 (prospectively repealed) (see LOCAL GOVERNMENT vol 69 (2009) PARA 772) must be commenced in the High Court); and to the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI

1991/724, art 6A (see PARA 116 text and note 26), proceedings in which both the county courts and the High Court have jurisdiction may be commenced either in a county court or in the High Court: art 4 (amended by the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 1992 s 7(2); and by SI 1999/1014). Except for a judgment or order of a county court for the payment of a sum of money in proceedings arising out of an agreement regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974, which may be enforced only in a county court, a judgment or order of a county court for the payment of a sum of money which it is sought to enforce wholly or partially by execution against goods may be enforced only in the High Court where the sum which it is sought to enforce is £5,000 or more, may be enforced only in a county court where the sum which it is sought to enforce is less than £600, and in any other case may be enforced in either the High Court or a county court: High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 8(1) (amended by SI 1993/1407; SI 1999/1014; SI 1995/205); High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 8(1A) (added by SI 1995/205). Where an enactment provides that a sum of money is to be or may be recoverable as if it were payable under a county court order and the recovery of the sum is sought wholly or partially by execution against goods, payment of that sum is to be enforced in accordance with the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 8(1) (a)-(c); however, art 8(1)(b) does not apply to the enforcement of money recoverable under the Employment Tribunals Act 1996 s 15(1) or a compromise sum which is recoverable under s 19A(3) (see EMPLOYMENT vol 41 (2009) PARA 1383); High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 8(2), (3) (added by SI 2009/577). Proceedings for the recovery of certain road traffic penalties may be taken only in Northampton County Court: see the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 8A (added by SI 1993/1407; and amended by SI 1996/3141; SI 2001/1387; SI 2009/577); and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 713. A judgment or order of a county court for possession of land made in a possession claim against trespassers may be enforced in the High Court or a county court: see art 8B (added by SI 2001/2685). The High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, does not apply to family proceedings within the meaning of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 Pt V (ss 32-42) (see MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 73 (2009) PARA 744); High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 12(a).

A county court has jurisdiction under:

A county court may not, however, make a mandatory, quashing or prohibiting order, or make an order of a kind prescribed by regulations made by the Lord Chancellor under the County Courts Act 1984 s 38 (as so substituted): see s 38(3), (5) (as so substituted); s 38(5) amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1) Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 160, 167). 16 As to sanctions in the form of payment of costs see generally PARA 255.

17 In certain circumstances where a claim is not started in the defendant's home court, proceedings may be automatically transferred there: see eg CPR 14.12(2) (determination of rate of payment by a judge); and PARA 197. 'Defendant's home court' means (1) if the claim is proceeding in a county court, the county court for the district in which the defendant resides or carries on business; and (2) if the claim is proceeding in the High Court, the district registry for the district in which the defendant resides or carries on business or, where there is no such district registry, the Royal Courts of Justice: CPR 2.3(1). As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

59. Judges of county courts.

Every circuit judge is, by virtue of his office, capable of sitting as a judge for any county court district in England and Wales¹. The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, must assign one or more circuit judges to each district and may from time to time vary the assignment of circuit judges among the districts².

Subject to any directions given by the Lord Chief Justice after consulting the Lord Chancellor, in any case where more than one circuit judge is so assigned to a district, any function conferred by or under the County Courts Act 1984 on the judge for a district may be exercised by any of the circuit judges for the time being assigned to that district³. Notwithstanding that he is not for the time being assigned to a particular district, a circuit judge must sit as a judge of that district at such times and on such occasions as the Lord Chief Justice may, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, direct and may sit as a judge of that district in any case where it appears to him that the judge of that district is not, or none of the judges of that district is, available to deal with the case⁴.

Every judge of the Court of Appeal, every judge of the High Court and every recorder is, by virtue of his office, capable of sitting as a judge for any county court district in England and Wales and, if he consents to do so, must sit as such a judge at such times and on such occasions as the Lord Chief Justice considers desirable after consulting the Lord Chancellor⁵.

1 County Courts Act 1984 s 5(1). As to county court districts see PARA 58. As to the appointment of circuit judges see the Courts Act 1971 s 16; and COURTS. The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the County Courts Act 1984 s 5: s 5(5) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 160, 163(1), (6)).

60. District judges and deputy district judges.

The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, must assign each district judge to one or more districts and may change an assignment so as to assign the district judge to a different district or districts¹. Every district judge is, by virtue of his office, capable of acting in any district whether or not assigned to it, but may do so only in accordance with arrangements made by or on behalf of the Lord Chief Justice².

If it appears to the Lord Chancellor that it is expedient to do so in order to facilitate the disposal of business in the county courts, he may appoint a person to be a deputy district judge³. A deputy district judge, while acting under his appointment and assigned to a district, has the same powers and is subject to the same liabilities as if he were a district judge assigned to the district⁴. The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, may assign a deputy district judge to one or more districts and may change an assignment so as to assign the deputy district judge to a different district or districts (or to no district)⁵.

The district judge for every district must keep or cause to be kept such records of and in relation to proceedings in the court for that district as the Lord Chancellor may by regulations made by statutory instrument prescribe⁶. Any entry in a book or other document required by those regulations to be kept for these purposes, or a copy of any such entry or document purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the district judge, is at all times without further proof to be admitted in any court or place whatsoever as evidence of the entry and of the proceeding referred to by it and of the regularity of that proceeding⁷.

1 County Courts Act 1984 s 6(2) (s 6 substituted by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 14, Sch 3 para 1(1)). A reference in any enactment or other instrument to the district judge for a district or of a county court is a reference to any district judge assigned to the district concerned: County Courts Act 1984 s 6(3) (as so substituted). The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise his functions under the County Courts Act 1984 s 6(2): s 6(7) (added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 s 56, Sch 11 paras 5, 6).

5 County Courts Act 1984 s 8(1B) (added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 7(4)). Every deputy district judge is, by virtue of his office, capable of acting as a district judge in any district to which he is not assigned, but may act in a district to which he is not assigned only in accordance with arrangements made by or on behalf of the Lord Chief Justice: County Courts Act 1984 s 8(1D) (added by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 Sch 11 para 7(4)).

6 County Courts Act 1984 s 12(1) (s 12 amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 Sch 18 para 42). By virtue of the Interpretation Act 1978 s 17(2)(b), the County Courts (Records of Proceedings) Regulations 1967, SI 1967/1194 (as amended and modified) have effect as if so made: see further COURTS. The Lord Chancellor must consult the Lord Chief Justice before making regulations under the County Courts Act 1984 s 12, and the Lord Chief Justice may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 109(4)) to exercise these functions: County Courts Act 1984 s 12(3), (4) (added by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 160, 165). The Lord Chancellor's functions under the County Courts Act 1984 ss 8(1), (3), 12(1) are protected functions for the purposes of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 19: see s 19(5), Sch 7 para 4. See further CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

61. Powers of judge, district judge and court officers to perform court functions and acts.

Where the Civil Procedure Rules provide for the court to perform any act then, except where an enactment, rule or practice direction provides otherwise, that act may be performed in relation to proceedings in a county court by any judge or district judge¹.

Where those rules require or permit the court to perform an act of a formal or administrative character, that act may be performed by a court officer². However, a requirement that a court officer carry out any act at the request of a party is subject to the payment of any fee required by a fees order for the carrying out of that act³.

62. Allocation of cases between levels of judiciary and to particular judges.

The Civil Procedure Rules set out, by supplementary practice direction, the matters over which district judges and deputy district judges in the county courts do not have jurisdiction or which they may deal with only on certain conditions¹.

In relation to injunctions which a county court has jurisdiction to make, the practice direction provides that such injunctions may only be made by a circuit judge, except:

- 99 (1) where the injunction is to be made in proceedings which a district judge otherwise has jurisdiction to hear²;
- 100 (2) where the injunction is sought in a money claim which has not yet been allocated to a track and the amount claimed does not exceed the fast track financial limit³;
- 101 (3) in specified circumstances⁴ in which a district judge or a master could make an injunction in the High Court⁵;
- 102 (4) where the injunction is to be made under specified provisions⁶ of the Housing Act 1996 or the Protection from Harassment Act 1997⁷.

A district judge may, however, make orders varying or discharging injunctions if all parties to the proceedings have consented to the variation or discharge⁸; and has jurisdiction to make anti-social behaviour orders and parenting orders⁹.

In relation to other pre-trial orders and interim remedies, the practice direction provides that a district judge may not make orders or grant interim remedies relating to appeals from district judges or deputy district judges¹⁰ or in appeals against costs assessments¹¹, except on an appeal¹² against the decision of an authorised court officer in detailed assessment proceedings¹³. To the extent that a county court has power to make a freezing order¹⁴, any cross-examination on the contents of a witness statement or affidavit which the court has ordered a person to make about his assets will take place before a district judge or, if he directs, before an examiner of the court, unless the circuit judge directs otherwise¹⁵.

A district judge may not make an order committing a person to prison except where an enactment authorises this¹⁶. Nor may he hear appeals on a point of law¹⁷ where a person is dissatisfied with a review of a local authority's decision under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1996¹⁸.

A district judge may not try a case in a claim made in respect of a judicial act under the Human Rights Act 1998 or a claim for a declaration of incompatibility under that Act¹⁹; nor may a district judge try a case in which an allegation of indirect discrimination is made against a public authority that would, if the court finds that it occurred, be unlawful as constituting discrimination²⁰ under the Race Relations Act 1976²¹.

The practice direction provides that a district judge has jurisdiction to hear the following:

- 103 (a) subject to certain exceptions²², any claim which has been allocated to the small claims track or fast track²³ or which is treated as being allocated to the multi-track²⁴ under the provisions relating to Part 8 proceedings²⁵;

- 104 (b) proceedings for the recovery of land, demotion claims under the Housing Act 1985²⁶ or the Housing Act 1988²⁷ and proceedings in a county court²⁸ relating to demoted tenancies²⁹;
- 105 (c) the assessment of damages or other sum due to a party under a judgment without any financial limit³⁰; and
- 106 (d) with the permission of the designated civil judge in respect of that case, any other proceedings³¹.

Furthermore, a case allocated to the small claims track may only be assigned to a circuit judge to hear with his consent³².

Where both the circuit judge and the district judge have jurisdiction in respect of any proceedings, the exercise of jurisdiction by the district judge is subject to any arrangements made by the designated civil judge for the proper distribution of business between circuit judges and district judges³³. The designated civil judge may make arrangements for proceedings to be assigned to individual district judges and may vary such arrangements either generally or in particular cases³⁴. The fact that a case has been assigned to a particular district judge does not, however, prevent another district judge from dealing with the case if the circumstances require³⁵.

Wherever a district judge has jurisdiction, he may refer the matter to a circuit judge instead of dealing with it himself³⁶.

UPDATE

62 Allocation of cases between levels of judiciary and to particular judges

NOTES--Certain functions under provisions mentioned in this paragraph are 'relevant functions' for the purposes of the Regulatory Enforcement and Sanctions Act 2008 s 4, Sch 3, see LOCAL GOVERNMENT vol 69 (2009) PARA 733.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(4) COUNTY COURTS/63. Miscellaneous provisions about officers.

63. Miscellaneous provisions about officers.

Subject to what follows, no officer¹ of a county court may, either by himself or his partner, be directly or indirectly engaged as legal representative or agent for any party in any proceedings in that court². Every person who contravenes this prohibition is liable for each offence on summary conviction to a fine of an amount not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale³.

This prohibition does not, however, apply to a person acting as district judge in another district⁴ nor to a deputy district judge⁵; but a deputy district judge must not act as such in relation to any proceedings in which he is, either by himself or his partner, directly or indirectly engaged as legal representative or agent for any party⁶.

Any person assaulting an officer of the court in the execution of his duty is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to both, or, alternatively, may be committed to prison by the judge for contempt of court or fined by the judge, or both⁷.

1 'Officer' in relation to a court means any district judge or deputy district judge assigned to that court, and any clerk, bailiff, usher or messenger in the service of the court: County Courts Act 1984 s 147(1) (amended by the Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 s 56, Sch 11 paras 5, 9).

2 County Courts Act 1984 s 13(1) (amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 125(3), Sch 18 para 49). 'Legal representative' means an authorised advocate or authorised litigator, as defined by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 119(1) (see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 65 (2008) PARA 498): County Courts Act 1984 s 147(1) (definition added by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 Sch 18 para 49). As from a day to be appointed, 'legal representative' means a person who, for the purposes of the Legal Services Act 2007, is an authorised person in relation to an activity which constitutes the exercise of a right of audience or the conduct of litigation (within the meaning of that Act): County Courts Act 1984 s 147(1) (definition amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Legal Services Act 2007 s 208(1), Sch 21 para 61). At the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed.

3 County Courts Act 1984 s 13(2). 'Standard scale' means the standard scale of maximum fines for summary offences as set out in the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 37: see the Interpretation Act 1978 s 5, Sch 1 (definition added by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 170(1), Sch 15 para 58(a)); and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 142. At the date at which this title states the law, the standard scale is as follows: level 1, £200; level 2, £500; level 3, £1,000; level 4, £2,500; level 5, £5,000: Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 37(2) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 17(1)). As to the determination of the amount of the fine actually imposed, as distinct from the level on the standard scale which it may not exceed, see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 164; and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 144.

4 He acting as district judge by virtue of the County Courts Act 1984 s 6(5): see PARA 60.

5 See the County Courts Act 1984 s 13(3), (4) (amended by virtue of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 74(1), (3)).

6 County Courts Act 1984 s 13(4) (as amended (see note 5); and amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 Sch 18 para 49).

7 See the County Courts Act 1984 s 14(1) (amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986). The maximum term of imprisonment is prospectively increased to 51 weeks: see the County Courts Act 1984 s 14(1) (amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 280(2), (3), Sch 26 para 33(1), (2)). At the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed. The judge may at any time revoke an order committing a person to prison under this provision and, if he is already in custody, order his discharge: County Courts Act 1984 s 14(2). A district judge or deputy district judge has the same powers under s 14 as a judge: s 14(3) (added by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 74(4)).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(5) SITTINGS AND VACATIONS/64. Court sittings.

(5) SITTINGS AND VACATIONS

64. Court sittings.

Sittings of the High Court may be held, and any other business of the High Court may be conducted, at any place in England and Wales¹, but, subject to rules of court, the Lord Chancellor, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, may give directions² which will determine the places at which the High Court sits outside the Royal Courts of Justice³, and the days and times when the High Court sits at any such place⁴.

There are four sittings of the Court of Appeal and of the High Court in every year, namely:

- 107 (1) the Michaelmas sittings which begin on 1 October and end on 21 December;
- 108 (2) the Hilary sittings which begin on 11 January and end on the Wednesday before Easter Sunday;
- 109 (3) the Easter sittings which begin on the second Tuesday after Easter Sunday and end on the Friday before the spring holiday⁵; and
- 110 (4) the Trinity sittings which begin on the second Tuesday after the spring holiday and end on 31 July⁶.

These provisions have been modified in relation to the year 2002 only⁷.

In any county court district⁸ the places at which the court sits, and the days and times when the court sits at any place, are to be determined in accordance with directions given, after consulting the Lord Chief Justice, by or on behalf of the Lord Chancellor⁹. A judge may from time to time adjourn any court held by him, and a district judge may from time to time adjourn any court held by him, or, in the absence of the judge, any court to be held by the judge¹⁰.

65. Vacations and vacation business.

Rules of court may make provision for regulating the vacations to be observed by the High Court and in the offices of that court¹. Rules of court may provide for securing such sittings of any Division of the High Court during vacation as the senior judge of that Division may with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor determine and they must provide for the transaction during vacation by judges of the High Court of all such business in the High Court as may require to be immediately or promptly transacted².

In the High Court, the senior judge of each Division has the power to direct that one or more judges of each Division of the High Court should sit in vacation on such days as may be directed, to hear such cases, claims, matters or applications requiring immediately or promptly to be heard and to hear other cases, claims, matters or applications if the senior judge of that Division determines that sittings are necessary for that purpose³.

Any party to a claim or matter may at any time apply to the court for an order that such claim or matter be heard in vacation and, if the court is satisfied that the claim or matter requires to be immediately or promptly heard, it may make an order accordingly and fix a date for the hearing⁴.

Any judge of the High Court may hear such other cases, claims, matters or applications in vacation as the court may direct⁵.

The above does not apply outside the Royal Courts of Justice. The senior presiding judge of each circuit, with the concurrence of the senior presiding judge, and the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster and the Chancery supervising judge for Birmingham, Bristol and Cardiff, with the concurrence of the Chancellor, may make such arrangements for vacation sittings in the courts for which they are respectively responsible as they think desirable⁶.

Subject to the discretion of the judge, any appeal and any application normally made to a judge may be made in the month of September⁷. In the month of August, save with the permission of a judge or under arrangements for vacation sittings in courts outside the Royal Courts of Justice, appeals to a judge will be limited⁸, and only applications of real urgency will be dealt with⁹. It is desirable, where this is practical, to submit applications or appeals to a master, district judge or judge prior to the hearing of the application or appeal so that they can be marked 'fit for August' or 'fit for vacation'. If they are so marked, then normally the judge will be prepared to hear the application or appeal in August, if marked 'fit for August', or in September if marked 'fit for vacation'. A request to have the papers so marked should normally be made in writing, shortly setting out the nature of the application or appeal and the reasons why it should be dealt with in August or in September, as the case may be¹⁰.

An application notice may, without permission, be issued returnable before a Queen's Bench master in the month of August for any of the following purposes:

- 111 (1) to set aside a claim form or particulars of claim, or service of a claim form or particulars of claim;
- 112 (2) to set aside judgment; for stay of execution;
- 113 (3) for any order by consent;
- 114 (4) for judgment or permission to enter judgment;
- 115 (5) for approval of settlements or for interim payment;

- 116 (6) for relief from forfeiture; for charging order; for third party debt order;
- 117 (7) for appointment or discharge of a receiver;
- 118 (8) for relief by way of interpleader by a sheriff or High Court enforcement officer;
- 119 (9) for transfer to a county court or for trial by master; and
- 120 (10) for time where time is running in the month of August¹¹.

In any case of urgency any other type of application notice may, with the permission of a master, be issued returnable before a master during the month of August¹².

There is no distinction between term time and vacation so far as business before the Chancery masters is concerned. The masters will deal with all types of business throughout the year, and when a master is on holiday his list will normally be taken by a deputy master¹³.

(6) TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS

66. General power of transfer.

The court's power to transfer proceedings from one court to another is a useful corrective to ensure that proceedings, wherever begun¹ or whatever forum the claimant has initially chosen², are dealt with or heard or determined by the court most appropriate or suitable for those proceedings.

When making or refusing an order for transfer, the court³ will have regard to the overriding objective⁴ and its duty actively to manage cases⁵. The matters to which it must have regard also include:

- 121 (1) the financial value of the claim⁶ and the amount in dispute, if different⁷;
- 122 (2) whether it would be more convenient or fair for hearings (including the trial) to be held in some other court⁸;
- 123 (3) the availability of a judge specialising in the type of claim in question⁹;
- 124 (4) whether the facts, legal issues, remedies or procedures involved are simple or complex¹⁰;
- 125 (5) the importance of the outcome of the claim to the public in general¹¹;
- 126 (6) the facilities available at the court where the claim is being dealt with and whether they may be inadequate because of any disabilities of a party or potential witness¹²;
- 127 (7) whether the making of a declaration of incompatibility under the relevant provision of the Human Rights Act 1998¹³ has arisen or may arise¹⁴;
- 128 (8) in the case of civil proceedings by or against the Crown¹⁵, the location of the relevant government department or officers of the Crown and, where appropriate, any relevant public interest that the matter should be tried in London¹⁶.

In general, the power to transfer is discretionary¹⁷ and the court has power to make transfer orders of its own initiative¹⁸ as well as on application being made¹⁹. In certain circumstances, however, transfer is automatic²⁰. Additionally, there are prescribed restrictions on the power of transfer²¹.

1 As to the court in which proceedings are to be started see PARA 116.

2 As to the choice of a Division of the High Court by the claimant see PARA 48.

3 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

4 As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

5 See CPR 1.4; and PARA 246. CPR Pt 30 deals with the transfer of proceedings between county courts, between the High Court and the county courts and within the High Court: CPR 30.1(1). The practice direction may make provision about the transfer of proceedings between the court and a tribunal: CPR 30.1(2). See Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 8 (transfer from the High Court or a county court to the Competition Appeal Tribunal and vice versa under the Enterprise Act 2002 s 16(4), (5)).

6 As to calculating the financial value of a claim see CPR 16.3(6); and PARA 116 note 5. The financial value is significant because of the financial limits set out in the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724: see PARA 116.

A transfer must only be made on the basis of the criterion in CPR 30.3(2)(g) where there is a real prospect that a declaration of incompatibility will be made: Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 7. The court must have regard to the matters set out in heads (1)-(7) in the text when considering whether to make a transfer order: (1) between the High Court and a county court, under the County Courts Act 1984 s 40(2), s 41(1) or s 42(2) (see PARA 69); (2) between county courts under CPR 30.2(1) (see PARA 68); or (3) between the Royal Courts of Justice and the district registries under CPR 30.2(4) (see PARA 67); CPR 30.3(1).

67. Transfer within the High Court.

The High Court may, having regard to the prescribed criteria¹, order proceedings in the Royal Courts of Justice or a district registry², or any part of such proceedings³, to be transferred from the Royal Courts of Justice to a district registry or from a district registry to the Royal Courts of Justice or to another district registry⁴. A district registry may order proceedings before it for the detailed assessment of costs to be transferred to another district registry if it is satisfied that the proceedings could be more conveniently or fairly taken in that other district registry⁵. Orders for the transfer of proceedings may be made either with or without application⁶.

The High Court may also order proceedings in any Division of the High Court to be transferred to another Division⁷ and a judge dealing with claims in a specialist list may order proceedings to be transferred to or from that list⁸.

1 le the criteria in CPR 30.3: see PARA 66.

2 As to district registries see PARA 54.

3 le such as a counterclaim or an application made in the proceedings: see CPR 30.2(4). As to the meaning of 'counterclaim' see PARA 618 note 3; and as to applications see generally PARA 315 et seq.

4 CPR 30.2(4). Probate proceedings may only be transferred under this provision to the Chancery Division at the Royal Courts of Justice or to one of the Chancery district registries: CPR 30.2(8). As to the Chancery district registries see PARA 57 note 3.

5 CPR 30.2(5).

6 See PARA 66 text and notes 17-20. An application for an order under CPR 30.2(4) or (5) must, if the claim is proceeding in a district registry, be made to that registry: CPR 30.2(6).

7 CPR 30.5(1); and see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 65(1). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. The power of transfer from one Division or judge of the High Court to another Division or judge may be exercised either on the application of a party or by the court of its own initiative. It is within the discretion of the court whether or not to order transfer, even if the proceedings involve a claim assigned by statute to a particular Division. As to such assignment see s 61; and PARA 43. Thus a claim will not necessarily be transferred from the Queen's Bench Division to the Chancery Division merely because it involves a claim for the execution of a trust, the rectification or cancellation of a deed or the specific performance of a contract to buy land: see Holloway v York (1877) 2 Ex D 333, CA; Storey v Waddle (1879) 4 QBD 289, CA; London Land Co Ltd v Harris (1884) 13 QBD 540. A claim arising out of a collision between ships will not necessarily be transferred to the Admiralty Court (Waddle v Wallsend Shipping Co Ltd [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep 105), especially if the collision occurred on an inland river, although proceedings within the original jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court will usually be so transferred (see Hawkins v Morgan (1880) 49 LJQB 618; Ocean Steamship Co v Anderson, Tritton & Co (1885) 33 WR 536, CA; The Gertrude, The Baron Aberdare (1888) 13 PD 105, CA; but see Roche v London and South Western Rly Co [1899] 2 QB 502, CA). In DBS Management plc v Excess Insurance Co Ltd (25 April 1994, unreported) it was said that the test for transfer from one Division to another was whether it was inappropriate for the case to be tried in the Division in which it was begun because that Division lacked a special expertise needed for the just and expeditious disposal of the case. See Fawdry & Co (a firm) v Murfitt [2002] EWCA Civ 643, [2003] QB 104, [2003] 4 All ER 60 (presiding judge had power to transfer case on his own initiative from Queen's Bench Division to Technology and Construction Court). If proceedings are transferred to another Division, all further steps or proceedings must be taken in that Division: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 64(2). The transfer will not affect the validity of any steps or proceedings taken or order made in the proceedings before the transfer: s 65(2). As to the use of cases decided under the old rules as an aid to interpreting the Civil Procedure Rules see PARA 33 text and note 2.

8 CPR 30.5(2). Any application for such a transfer must be made to a judge dealing with claims in that list: CPR 30.5(3). A reference to a 'specialist list' is a reference to a list that has been designated as such by a rule or practice direction (CPR 2.3(2)) such as, eg, the list of a mercantile court by CPR 59.1(3). As to specialist proceedings see PARA 1536 et seq.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(6) TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS/68. Transfer between county courts.

68. Transfer between county courts.

A county court may order proceedings before that court, or any part of them¹, to be transferred to another county court if it is satisfied that an order should be made having regard to the prescribed criteria² or that proceedings for the detailed assessment of costs or the enforcement of a judgment or order could be more conveniently or fairly taken in that other county court³.

If proceedings have been started in the wrong county court, a judge of the county court may order that the proceedings be transferred to the county court in which they ought to have been started, continue in the county court in which they have been started or be struck out⁴.

An application for an order under these provisions must be made to the county court where the claim is proceeding⁵.

Cases allocated to the multi-track⁶ are normally transferred to the nearest civil trial centre⁷.

1 le such as a counterclaim or an application made in the proceedings: see CPR 30.2(1). As to the meaning of 'counterclaim' see PARA 618 note 3; and as to applications see PARA 315 et seq.

2 le the criteria set out in CPR 30.3: see PARA 66.

3 CPR 30.2(1). Where, however, some enactment, other than the Civil Procedure Rules, requires proceedings to be started in a particular county court, neither CPR 30.2(1) nor CPR 30.2(2) (see the text and note 4) gives the court power to order proceedings to be transferred to a county court which is not the court in which they should have been started or to order them to continue in the wrong court: CPR 30.2(7). As to the court in which proceedings are to be started see further PARA 116.

4 CPR 30.2(2); and see note 3. As to the meaning of 'strike out' see PARA 218 note 2. However the power to strike out is unlikely to be exercised unless the case is extreme as the overriding objective to deal with cases justly and proportionately would not normally warrant such a draconian order. As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

5 CPR 30.2(3).

6 As to cases normally allocated to the multi-track see PARA 269.

7 See PARA 269.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(6) TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS/69. Transfer between High Court and county court.

69. Transfer between High Court and county court.

Where the High Court is satisfied that any proceedings before it are required by any provision made under the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990¹ or by or under any other enactment to be in a county court it must order the transfer of the proceedings to a county court or, if the court is satisfied that the person bringing the proceedings knew, or ought to have known, of that requirement, order that they be struck out². Subject to any such provision, the High Court may order the transfer of any proceedings before it to a county court³. Such an order may be made either on the motion of the High Court itself or on the application of any party to the proceedings⁴. Proceedings so transferred must be transferred to such county court as the High Court considers appropriate, having taken into account the convenience of the parties and that of any other persons likely to be affected and the state of business in the courts concerned⁵.

Similarly, where a county court is satisfied that any proceedings before it are required by any provision of a kind mentioned above⁶ to be in the High Court, it must order the transfer of the proceedings to the High Court or, if the court is satisfied that the person bringing the proceedings knew, or ought to have known, of that requirement, order that they be struck out⁷. Subject to any such provision, a county court may order the transfer of any proceedings before it to the High Court⁸. Such an order may be made either on the motion of the court itself or on the application of any party to the proceedings⁹.

These transfer provisions do not apply to family proceedings¹⁰.

Finally, if at any stage in proceedings commenced in a county court or transferred to a county court under the above provisions, the High Court thinks it desirable that the proceedings, or any part of them, should be heard and determined in the High Court, it may order the transfer to the High Court of the proceedings or, as the case may be, of that part of them¹¹.

Transfer from the High Court to the county court and vice versa is a power exercisable by any judge, master or district judge¹². Claims of insufficiently high value are normally transferred from the High Court to the county court¹³.

Where proceedings for the enforcement of any judgment or order of the High Court are transferred under the above provisions to the county court, the judgment or order may be enforced as if it were a judgment or order of a county court and it must be treated¹⁴ as a judgment or order of that court for all purposes¹⁵. However, the powers of any court to set aside, correct, vary or quash a judgment or order of the High Court, and the enactments relating to appeals from such a judgment or order, continue to apply and the powers of any court to set aside, correct, vary or quash a judgment or order of a county court, and the enactments relating to appeals from such a judgment or order, do not apply¹⁶. Similarly, where proceedings for the enforcement of any judgment or order of a county court are transferred under these provisions to the High Court by order of the county court¹⁷, the judgment or order may be enforced as if it were a judgment or order of the High Court and it must be treated¹⁸ as a judgment or order of that court for all purposes¹⁹. However, the powers of any court to set aside, correct, vary or quash a judgment or order of a county court, and the enactments relating to appeals from such a judgment or order, continue to apply and the powers of any court to set aside, correct, vary or quash a judgment or order of the High Court, and the enactments relating to appeals from such a judgment or order, do not apply²⁰.

The High Court's power to transfer proceedings under the County Courts Act 1984 s 40(2), and therefore the county court's jurisdiction to hear and determine proceedings, is not constrained by the limits which otherwise exist on a county court's jurisdiction: National Westminster Bank plc v King [2008] EWHC 280 (Ch), [2008] Ch 385, [2008] All ER (D) 292 (Feb).

This power is without prejudice to the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 29 (power of High Court to issue prerogative orders: see JUDICIAL REVIEW vol 61 (2010) PARAS 602, 709) but must be exercised in relation to family proceedings in accordance with directions given under the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 s 37: County Courts Act 1984 s 41(2) (amended by the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 s 46(1), Sch 1 para 30; and, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 1 para 1(2), to substitute a reference to the Senior Courts Act 1981 for the reference to the Supreme Court Act 1981; at the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed). In exercising the power to transfer cases conferred by the County Courts Act 1984 s 41(1), the court must have regard to the criteria set out in CPR 30.3(2) (see PARA 66): see CPR 30.3(1)(a). 69 Transfer between High Court and county court

NOTE 11--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(6) TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS/70. Procedure on transfer.

70. Procedure on transfer.

Where the court¹ orders proceedings to be transferred, the court from which they are to be transferred must give notice of the transfer to all the parties². The transferring court must immediately send notice to the receiving court of the name and number of the case, at the same time as it notifies the parties³. The transfer order takes effect from the date when it is made by the court⁴ but any order made before the transfer of the proceedings is not affected by the order to transfer⁵.

The appropriate court in which to appeal⁶ or apply to set aside⁷ a transfer order depends on when and where the order was made.

3 Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 paras 4.1, 4.2.

4 Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 3.

5 CPR 30.4(2).

6 For example, an order made by a district judge transferring proceedings between county courts must be appealed in the receiving court (see Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 5.1); although the receiving court may remit the appeal to the transferring court for the sake of the parties' convenience (see para 5.2). For the rules on where to make applications and appeals see CPR 23.2; CPR Pt 52; and PARAS 304, 1693 et seq.

7 Where a party may apply to set aside an order for transfer (eg under CPR 23.10: see PARA 312), the application must be made to the court that made the order and is made in accordance with CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq): Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 paras 6.1, 6.2.

74. Transfer of competition law claims.

If, in any proceedings in the Queen's Bench Division (other than proceedings in the Commercial or Admiralty Courts), a district registry of the High Court or a county court, a party's statement of case raises an issue relating to the application of competition law¹, then the normal rules as to transfer² do not apply and the court³ must transfer the proceedings to the Chancery Division of the High Court at the Royal Courts of Justice⁴. If any such proceedings which have been commenced in the Queen's Bench Division or a mercantile court fall within the definition of 'commercial claim'⁵, any party to those proceedings may apply for the transfer of the proceedings to the Commercial Court⁶. If the application is refused, the proceedings must be transferred to the Chancery Division of the High Court at the Royal Courts of Justice⁷.

(7) CONSOLIDATION OF PROCEEDINGS

75. Consolidation of proceedings; in general.

Prior to the advent of the Civil Procedure Rules, rules of court governed whether or not two or more causes or matters could by order of the court be combined and united and treated as one cause or matter¹.

Now the power either to consolidate proceedings² or to try two or more claims on the same occasion³ is specifically provided for as being amongst the court's general powers of case management⁴. Either power may be exercised by the court of its own initiative or on application being made to it⁵. The court has a duty to further the overriding objective⁶ by actively managing cases⁷. A court considering whether or not to consolidate proceedings is most likely to be concerned with whether costs and time could be thereby saved.

1 See RSC Ord 4 r 9 (revoked). The power to make an order of consolidation was discretionary, and the court had to consider whether it was desirable in all the circumstances that the common questions of law or fact arising or the rights to relief claimed in the several causes or matters should all be disposed of at the same time: see Payne v British Time Recorder Co Ltd and WW Curtis Ltd[1921] 2 KB 1, CA; Harwood v Statesman Publishing Co Ltd (1929) 98 LJB 450, CA; Daws v Daily Sketch and Sunday Graphic Ltd[1960] 1 All ER 397, [1960] 1 WLR 126, CA. (8) COURT DOCUMENTS

76. Introduction.

Part 5 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ contains general provisions about documents used in court proceedings² and the obligations of a court officer³ in relation to those documents⁴.

- 1 See CPR Pt 5; and PARA 77 et seq.
- 2 See CPR 5.1(a). As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.
- 3 As to the meaning of 'court officer' see PARA 49 note 3.
- 4 See CPR 5.1(b).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(8) COURT DOCUMENTS/77. Preparation of documents.

77. Preparation of documents.

Where, under the Civil Procedure Rules, a document is to be prepared by the court¹, the document may be prepared by the party whose document it is, unless a court officer² otherwise directs³ or it is a document relating to the reissue of a warrant in a county court where the condition upon which the warrant was suspended has not been complied with⁴ or the issue of a warrant of committal in the county court⁵, to which particular county court rules apply⁶.

Nothing in these provisions requires a court officer to accept a document which is illegible, has not been duly authorised, or is unsatisfactory for some other similar reason⁷.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 As to the meaning of 'court officer' see PARA 49 note 3.

3 See CPR 5.2(1)(a).

4 Ie a document to which CPR Sch 2 CCR Ord 25 r 8(9) applies.

78. Form of documents.

Statements of case¹ and other documents drafted by a legal representative² must bear his or her signature and if they are drafted by a legal representative as a member or employee of a firm they must be signed in the name of the firm³.

Every document prepared by a party for filing⁴ or use at the court⁵ must:

- 129 (1) unless the nature of the document renders it impracticable, be on A4 paper of durable quality having a margin not less than 3.5 centimetres wide⁶;
- 130 (2) be fully legible and, normally, typed⁷;
- 131 (3) where possible be bound securely in a manner which would not hamper filing or otherwise each page must be indorsed with the case number⁸;
- 132 (4) have the pages numbered consecutively⁹;
- 133 (5) be divided into numbered paragraphs¹⁰;
- 134 (6) have all numbers, including dates, expressed as figures¹¹; and
- 135 (7) give in the margin the reference of every document mentioned that has already been filed¹².

A document which is a copy produced by a colour photostat machine or other similar device may be filed at the court office provided that the coloured date seal of the court is not reproduced on the copy¹³.

79. Signature of documents by mechanical means.

Where any of the Civil Procedure Rules or any practice direction requires a document to be signed, that requirement is satisfied if the signature is printed by computer or other mechanical means¹. Where, under this rule, a replica signature is printed electronically or by other mechanical means on any document, the name of the person whose signature is printed must also be printed so that the person may be identified; but this requirement does not apply to claim forms issued through the claims production centre².

A document purporting to bear the court's seal is admissible in evidence without further proof⁶.

NOTE 6--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(8) COURT DOCUMENTS/82. Supply of documents from court records.

82. Supply of documents from court records.

A court or court office may keep a publicly accessible register of claims which have been issued out of that court or court office¹. Any person who pays the prescribed fee² may, during office hours³, search any available register of claims⁴.

A party to proceedings may, unless the court⁵ orders otherwise, obtain from the records of the court a copy of any document of a specified⁶ type⁷ and may, if the court gives permission, obtain from the records of the court a copy of any other document filed⁸ by a party or communication between the court and a party or another person⁹.

The general rule is that a person who is not a party to proceedings may obtain from the court records a copy of (1) a statement of case, but not any documents filed with or attached to the statement of case, or intended by the party whose statement it is to be served with it; (2) a judgment or order given or made in public (whether made at a hearing or without a hearing)¹⁰. A non-party may, if the court gives permission, obtain from the records of the court a copy of any other document filed by a party, or communication between the court and a party or another person¹¹. A non-party may obtain a copy of a statement of case or judgment or order only if (a) where there is one defendant, the defendant has filed an acknowledgment of service or a defence; (b) where there is more than one defendant, either (i) all the defendants have filed an acknowledgment of service or a defence; or (ii) at least one defendant has filed an acknowledgment of service or a defence and the court gives permission; (c) the claim has been listed for a hearing; or (d) judgment has been entered in the claim¹². The court may, on the application of a party or of any person identified in a statement of case, (A) order that a non-party may not obtain a copy of that statement of case; (B) restrict the persons or classes of persons who may obtain a copy of a statement of case; (C) order that persons or classes of persons may only obtain a copy of a statement of case if it is edited in accordance with the directions of the court; or (D) make such other order as it thinks fit¹³. Where the court makes an order under the above provisions, a non-party who wishes to obtain a copy of the statement of case, or to obtain an unedited copy of the statement of case, may apply on notice to the party or person identified in the statement of case who requested the order, for permission¹⁴.

A person wishing to obtain a copy of a document under the above provisions must pay any prescribed fee and, if the court's permission is required, file an application notice¹⁵ or, if permission is not required, file a written request for the document¹⁶. An application for an order by a party or a person identified in a statement of case¹⁷ or for permission to obtain a copy of a document¹⁸ may be made without notice, but the court may direct notice to be given to any person who would be affected by its decision¹⁹. The above provisions do not apply in relation to any proceedings in respect of which a rule or practice direction makes different provision²⁰.

83 Supply of documents to Attorney General

NOTE 2--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(8) COURT DOCUMENTS/84. Filing and sending documents by electronic means.

84. Filing and sending documents by electronic means.

A practice direction may make provision for documents to be filed or sent to the court¹ by facsimile or other electronic means². Any such practice direction may (1) provide that only particular categories of documents may be filed or sent to the court by such means; (2) provide that particular provisions only apply in specific courts; and (3) specify the requirements that must be fulfilled for any document filed or sent to the court by such means³. Such provision has been made⁴, and the relevant practice direction provides that a party to a claim in a specified court⁵ may send a specified document⁶ to the court by e-mail⁷ and that a party to a claim in a specified court⁸ may send a specified document⁹ to the court using the online forms service¹⁰.

However, a party must not use e-mail to take any step in a claim for which a fee is payable¹¹. A party may make an application using e-mail in the Preston Combined Court, where permitted to do so by PREMA (Preston E-mail Application Service) User Guide and Protocols¹², and a party may file an application notice by e-mail in the Civil Appeals Office or in the Preston Combined Court where permitted to do so by PREMA (Preston E-mail Application Service) User Guide and Protocols¹³.

A party may use the online forms service to take a step in a claim for which a fee is payable¹⁴. The fee must be paid, using the facilities available at the online forms service, before the application, or other document attracting a fee, is forwarded to the specified court¹⁵. The online forms service will assist the user in completing a document accurately but the user is responsible for ensuring that the rules and practice directions relating to the document have been complied with¹⁶. Transmission by the service does not guarantee that the document will be accepted by the specified court¹⁷.

Where a party files a document electronically¹⁸, he must not send a hard copy of that document to the court¹⁹. A document is not filed until the transmission²⁰ is received by the court, whatever time it is shown to have been sent²¹. The time of receipt of a transmission will be recorded electronically on the transmission as it is received²². If a transmission is received after 4 pm, the transmission will be treated as received, and any document attached to the transmission will be treated as filed, on the next day the court office is open²³. A party sending an e-mail or using the online forms service in accordance with the relevant requirements is responsible for ensuring that the transmission or any document attached to it is filed within any relevant time limits²⁴. The court will normally reply by e-mail where the response is to a message transmitted electronically and the sender has provided an e-mail address²⁵. Parties are advised not to transmit electronically any correspondence or documents of a confidential or sensitive nature, as security cannot be guaranteed²⁶. If a document transmitted electronically requires urgent attention, the sender should contact the court by telephone²⁷. A document that is required by a rule or practice direction to be filed at court is not filed when it is sent to the judge by e-mail²⁸.

Where a party wishes to file a document containing a statement of truth²⁹ electronically, that party should retain the document containing the original signature and file with the court a version of the document satisfying one of the following requirements: (a) the name of the person who has signed the statement of truth is typed underneath the statement; (b) the person who has signed the statement of truth has applied a facsimile of his signature to the statement in the document by mechanical means; or (c) the document that is filed is a scanned version of the document containing the original signature to the statement of truth³⁰.

UPDATE

84 Filing and sending documents by electronic means

NOTE 23--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(8) COURT DOCUMENTS/85. Documents for filing at court.

85. Documents for filing at court.

The date on which a document was filed¹ at court² must be recorded on the document³. This may be done by a seal⁴ or a receipt stamp⁵.

Particulars of the date of delivery at a court office of any document for filing and the title of the proceedings in which the document is filed must be entered in court records, on the court file or on a computer kept in the court office for the purpose. Except where a document has been delivered at the court office through the post, the time of delivery must also be recorded⁶.

Subject to the rules about producing a document filed, lodged or held in a court office to another court, tribunal or arbitrator⁷, a party may file a document at court by sending it by facsimile ('fax')⁸. Where a document is filed by fax, the party filing it must not send the court a hard copy in addition⁹. A party filing a document by fax should, however, be aware that the document is not filed at court until it is delivered by the court's fax machine, whatever time it is shown to have been transmitted from the party's machine¹⁰; it remains the responsibility of the party to ensure that the document is delivered to the court in time¹¹. If a fax is delivered after 4 pm it will be treated as filed on the next day the court office is open¹². If a fax relates to a hearing, the date and time of the hearing must be prominently displayed¹³.

Fax should not be used to send letters or documents of a routine or non-urgent nature¹⁴. Nor should it be used, except in an unavoidable emergency, to deliver a document which attracts a fee¹⁵, a document relating to a hearing less than two hours ahead, or trial bundles or skeleton arguments¹⁶.

Where courts have several fax machines, each allocated to an individual section, fax messages must only be sent to the machine of the section for which the message is intended¹⁷.

Where the court orders any document to be lodged in court, the document must, unless otherwise directed, be deposited in the office of that court¹⁸. A document filed, lodged or held in any court office may not be taken out of that office without the permission of the court unless the document is to be sent to the office of another court¹⁹, except in accordance with the rule relating to impounded documents²⁰ or in accordance with the following provisions²¹.

Where a document filed, lodged or held in a court office is required to be produced to any court, tribunal or arbitrator, the document may be produced by sending it by registered post²² to the court, tribunal or arbitrator in accordance with the following provisions²³. Any court, tribunal or arbitrator or any party requiring any document filed, lodged or held in any court office to be produced must apply to that court office by sending a completed request²⁴, stamped with the prescribed fee²⁵. On receipt of the request the court officer will submit it to a master in the Royal Courts of Justice or to a district judge elsewhere, who may direct that the request be complied with. Before giving a direction the master or district judge may require to be satisfied that the request is made in good faith and that the document is required to be produced for the reasons stated. The master or district judge giving the direction may also direct that, before the document is sent, an official copy of it is made and filed in the court office at the expense of the party requiring the document to be produced²⁶.

On the direction of the master or district judge the court officer must send the document by registered post addressed to the court, tribunal or arbitrator, with an envelope stamped and addressed for use in returning the document to the court office from which it was sent, a certificate in the prescribed form²⁷ and a covering letter describing the document, stating at whose request and for what purpose it is sent, referring to these provisions and containing a request that the document be returned to the court office from which it was sent in the enclosed envelope as soon as the court or tribunal no longer requires it²⁸.

It is the duty of the court, tribunal or arbitrator to whom the document was sent to keep it in safe custody, and to return it by registered post to the court office from which it was sent, as soon as the court, tribunal or arbitrator no longer requires it²⁹.

In each court office a record must be kept of each document sent and the date on which it was sent and the court, tribunal or arbitrator to whom it was sent and the date of its return. It is the duty of the court officer who has signed the certificate accompanying the document³⁰ to ensure that the document is returned within a reasonable time and to make inquiries and report to the master or district judge who has given the direction to comply with the request for the document if the document is not returned, so that steps may be taken to secure its return³¹.

Notwithstanding the above provisions, the master or district judge may direct a court officer to attend the court, tribunal or arbitrator for the purpose of producing the document³².

UPDATE

85 Documents for filing at court

NOTE 12--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(8) COURT DOCUMENTS/86. Enrolment of deeds and other documents.

86. Enrolment of deeds and other documents.

The Master of the Rolls may make regulations for authorising and regulating the enrolment or filing of instruments in the Supreme Court, and for prescribing the form in which certificates of enrolment or filing are to be issued¹. Such regulations do not affect the operation of any enactment requiring or authorising the enrolment of any instrument in the Supreme Court or prescribing the manner in which any instrument is to be enrolled there².

Any deed or document which by virtue of any enactment is required or authorised to be enrolled in the Supreme Court may be enrolled in the Central Office of the High Court³.

The following practice must be followed in any case in which a child's name is to be changed⁴ and to which the Enrolment of Deeds (Change of Name) Regulations 1994⁵ apply⁶. Where a person has by any order of the High Court, a county court or a family proceedings court been given parental responsibility⁷ for a child and applies to the Central Office, Filing Department, for the enrolment of a deed poll to change the surname (family name) of a child who is under the age of 18 years (unless the child is or has been married or has formed a civil partnership), the application must be supported by the production of the consent in writing of every other person having parental responsibility⁸. In the absence of that consent, the application will be adjourned generally unless and until permission is given in the proceedings in which the above-mentioned order was made to change the surname of the child and the permission is produced to the Central Office⁹. Where an application is made to the Central Office by a person who has not been given parental responsibility for a child by any order of the High Court, a county court or a family proceedings court for the enrolment of a deed poll to change the surname of the child who is under the age of 18 years (unless the child is or has been married or has formed a civil partnership), the court's permission to enrol the deed will be granted if the consent in writing of every person having parental responsibility is produced or if the person (or, if more than one, persons) having parental responsibility is dead or overseas or despite the exercise of reasonable diligence it has not been possible to find him or her for other good reason¹⁰. In cases of doubt the Senior Master or, in his absence, the practice master will refer the matter to the Master of the Rolls¹¹. In the absence of any of the conditions specified above the Senior Master or the Master of the Rolls, as the case may be, may refer the matter to the Official Solicitor for investigation and report¹².

1 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 133(1). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. Any such regulations must be made by statutory instrument, which must be laid before Parliament after being made; and the Statutory Instruments Act 1946 (see STATUTES vol 44(1) (Reissue) PARA 1501 et seq) applies to a statutory instrument containing such regulations in like manner as if the regulations had been made by a Minister of the Crown: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 133(5). Any instrument which is required or authorised by or under the 1981 Act or any other Act to be enrolled or engrossed in the Supreme Court is deemed to have been duly enrolled or engrossed if it is written on material authorised or required by regulations so made and has been filed or otherwise preserved in accordance with such regulations: s 133(3). In exercise of the power so conferred, the Master of the Rolls has made the Enrolment of Deeds (Change of Name) Regulations 1994, SI 1994/604 (amended by SI 2005/2056), which are reproduced in Practice Direction--Court Documents PD 5A, Appendix. See further PERSONAL PROPERTY vol 35 (Reissue) PARA 1279.

The Supreme Court Act 1981 s 133(1)-(4) is amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 4 para 26 to substitute references to the 'Senior Courts' for references to the 'Supreme Court'. At the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed.

2 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 133(2) (prospectively amended: see note 1). The Lord Chancellor may also, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls and of the Treasury, make regulations by statutory instrument prescribing the fees to be paid on the enrolment or filing of any instrument in the Supreme Court: see s 133(4), (5) (s 133(4) prospectively amended: see note 1); the Enrolment of Deeds (Fees) Regulations 1994, SI 1994/601; and PERSONAL PROPERTY vol 35 (Reissue) PARA 1279. The Lord Chancellor's function under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 133 is a protected function for the purposes of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 19: see s 19(5), Sch 7 para 4. UPDATE

NOTE 1--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(9) FEES/87. Supreme Court and county court fees.

(9) FEES

87. Supreme Court and county court fees.

The Lord Chancellor may with the consent of the Treasury by order prescribe fees payable in respect of anything dealt with by the Supreme Court or county courts¹, other than fees which he or some other authority otherwise has power to prescribe². When including any provision in such an order, the Lord Chancellor must have regard to the principle that access to the courts must not be denied³. The Lord Chancellor must take such steps as are reasonably practicable to bring information about fees to the attention of persons likely to have to pay them⁴. Fees payable under an order made under these provisions are recoverable summarily as a civil debt⁵.

The Civil Proceedings Fees Order 2008⁶ provides for fees⁷ in most proceedings in the Supreme Court and county courts. The provisions of the Order do not, however, apply to the following⁸:

- 136 (1) non-contentious probate business⁹;
- 137 (2) the enrolment of documents¹⁰;
- 138 (3) criminal proceedings (except proceedings on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench Division (now known as the Administrative Court)¹¹ to which the fees prescribed in those provisions are applicable)¹²;
- 139 (4) proceedings by sheriffs, under-sheriffs, deputy-sheriffs or other officers of the sheriff¹³; and
- 140 (5) family proceedings in the High Court or a county court¹⁴.

Detailed provision is made for the purpose of ascertaining whether a party is entitled to a remission or part remission of a prescribed fee¹⁵. No fee is payable under the 2008 Order if, at the time when a fee would otherwise be payable, the party is in receipt of a qualifying benefit¹⁶ or the party has a specified number of children¹⁷ and a gross annual income below a specified amount¹⁸, or a disposable monthly income of less than £50¹⁹. Part remission of fees is granted if the party's disposable monthly income is greater than £50²⁰. The maximum amount of fee payable is (a) if the disposable monthly income of the party is more than £50 but does not exceed £210, an amount equal to one-quarter of every £10 of the party's disposable monthly income up to a maximum of £50; and (b) if the disposable monthly income is more than £210, an amount equal to £50 plus one-half of every £10 over £200 of the party's disposable monthly income²¹. Where the fee that would otherwise be payable under the 2008 Order is greater than the maximum fee which a party is required to pay as calculated in heads (a) and (b), the fee will be remitted to the amount payable as so calculated²². An application for remission or part remission of a fee must be made to the court officer at the time when the fee would otherwise be payable²³.

Where it appears to the Lord Chancellor that the payment of any fee prescribed by the 2008 Order would, owing to the exceptional circumstances of the particular case, involve undue financial hardship, the Lord Chancellor may reduce or remit the fee in that case²⁴.

Where a party has not provided the documentary evidence required in support of his application for remission or part remission of a fee²⁵ and a fee has been paid at a time when it was not payable²⁶, the fee will be refunded if documentary evidence relating to the time when the fee became payable is provided at a later date²⁷. Where a fee has been paid at a time where the Lord Chancellor, if all the circumstances had been known, would have reduced or remitted the fee²⁸, the fee or the amount by which the fee would have been reduced, as the case may be, will be refunded²⁹. In either case, no refund will be made unless the party who paid the fee applies within six months of paying the fee³⁰, although the Lord Chancellor may extend the period of six months mentioned if the Lord Chancellor considers that there is a good reason for an application being made after the end of the period of six months³¹.

Where a restraint order is in force against a party³² and the party makes an application for permission to (i) issue proceedings or take a step in proceedings as required by the restraint order; (ii) apply for amendment or discharge of the order; or (iii) appeal the order, the fee prescribed for the application is payable in full³³. If the court grants the permission requested, the applicant will be refunded the difference between the fee paid and the fee that would have been payable if the provisions as to remission had been applied without reference to the above requirement to pay the full fee³⁴.

Where by any convention entered into by Her Majesty with any foreign power it is provided that no fee is required to be paid in respect of any proceedings, the fees specified in the 2008 Order are not payable in respect of those proceedings³⁵.

1 Courts Act 2003 s 92(1) (amended, as from a day to be appointed, by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 2 para 4(1), (3), to substitute a reference to the Senior Courts for the reference to the Supreme Court; at the date at which this title states the law, no such day had been appointed). Before making such an order, the Lord Chancellor must consult (1) the Lord Chief Justice; (2) the Master of the Rolls; (3) the President of the Queen's Bench Division; (4) the President of the Family Division; (5) the Chancellor of the High Court; (6) the Head of Civil Justice; (7) the Deputy Head of Civil Justice (if there is one) (Courts Act 2003 s 92(5) (amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 15(1), Sch 4 Pt 1 paras 308, 345)); and before making a fees order in relation to civil proceedings, the Lord Chancellor must consult the Civil Justice Council (Courts Act 2003 s 92(6)). As to the Head of Civil Justice see PARA 12 note 5. As to the Civil Justice Council see PARA 28.

A fees order made by the Lord Chancellor may, in particular, contain provision as to (a) scales or rates of fees; (b) exemptions from or reductions in fees; (c) remission of fees in whole or in part: s 92(2).

2 Courts Act 2003 s 92(4). Nothing in s 92 prevents an authority which has power to prescribe fees payable in any of the courts referred to in s 92(1) from applying to any extent provisions contained in an order made under s 92; and an instrument made in exercise of the power is to be read (unless the contrary intention appears) as applying those provisions as amended from time to time: s 92(9), (10).

3 Courts Act 2003 s 92(3).

4 Courts Act 2003 s 92(7).

5 Courts Act 2003 s 92(8).

6 The Civil Proceedings Fees Order 2008, SI 2008/1053, which came into force on 1 May 2008 (see art 1(1)), and has been amended by SI 2008/2853.

(10) TIME

88. Calculation of time.

Part 2 of the Civil Procedure Rules contains the rule¹ that shows how to calculate any period of time for doing any act which is specified by those rules, by a practice direction or by a judgment or order of the court². A period of time expressed as a number of days must be computed as clear days³. Where the specified period is five days or less and includes a Saturday or Sunday or a bank holiday, Christmas Day or Good Friday, that day does not count⁴.

When the period specified by the rules or a practice direction, or by any judgment or court order, for doing any act at the court office ends on a day on which the office is closed⁵, that act is in time if done on the next day on which the court office is open⁶.

1 Ie CPR 2.8: see the text and notes 2-6.

2 See CPR 2.8(1). As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 2.8(2). For these purposes, 'clear days' means that in computing the number of days the day on which the period begins and, if the end of the period is defined by reference to an event, the day on which that event occurs, are not included: CPR 2.8(3). The following examples are given in CPR 2.8(3):

- 24 (1) Notice of an application must be served at least three days before the hearing. An application is to be heard on Friday 20 October. The last date for service is Monday 16 October.
- 25 (2) The court is to fix a date for a hearing. The hearing must be at least 28 days after the date of notice. If the court gives notice of the date of the hearing on 1 October, the earliest date for the hearing is 30 October.
- 26 (3) Particulars of claim must be served within 14 days of service of the claim form. The claim form is served on 2 October. The last day for service of the particulars of claim is 16 October.

As to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2; as to the claim form see PARA 117; and as to particulars of claim see PARA 587 et seq.

4 See CPR 2.8(4). The following example is given in CPR 2.8(4): Notice of an application must be served at least three days before the hearing. An application is to be heard on Monday 20 October. The last date for service is Tuesday 14 October.

As to bank holidays see TIME vol 97 (2010) PARA 321.

5 As to office hours see PARA 52 note 1 (Supreme Court Office), PARA 58 note 5 (county court offices). As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court of England and Wales is renamed the Senior Courts of England and Wales: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(1). At the date at which this title states the law, no day had been appointed for these purposes.

(11) JUDICIAL DECISIONS AS AUTHORITIES

The use of precedent is an indispensable foundation upon which to decide what is the law and its application to individual cases; it provides at least some degree of certainty upon which individuals can rely in the conduct of their affairs, as well as a basis for orderly development of legal rules¹. The enunciation of the reason or principle upon which a question before a court has been decided is alone binding as a precedent². This underlying principle is called the ratio decidendi, namely the general reasons given for the decision or the general grounds upon which it is based, detached or abstracted from the specific peculiarities of the particular case which gives rise to the decision³. What constitutes binding precedent is the ratio decidendi, and this is almost always to be ascertained by an analysis of the material facts of the case, for a judicial decision is often reached by a process of reasoning involving a major premise consisting of a pre-existing rule of law, either statutory or judge-made, and a minor premise consisting of the material facts of the case under immediate consideration⁴.

The concrete decision alone is binding between the parties to it, but it is the abstract ratio decidendi, as ascertained on a consideration of the judgment in relation to the subject matter of the decision⁵, which alone has the force of law and which, when it is clear what it was, is binding; but, if it is not clear, it is not part of a tribunal's duty to spell out with difficulty a ratio decidendi in order to be bound by it⁶, and it is always dangerous to take one or two observations out of a long judgment and treat them as if they gave the ratio decidendi of the case⁷. If more reasons than one are given by a tribunal for its judgment, all are taken as forming the ratio decidendi⁸.

The House of Lords is entitled to question or limit a previous ratio decidendi of the House (1) where it is obscure; (2) where it is out of line with other authorities or established principles; and (3) where it is much wider than was necessary for the decision⁹. Where there is no discernible ratio decidendi common to the majority of the House of Lords the reasoning accepted in a long line of cases before that decision will be adopted by the House¹⁰. Where too rigid an adherence to precedent may lead to injustice in a particular case and an undue restriction of the proper development of the law, the House of Lords may depart from its previous decisions when it appears right to do so¹¹.

When construing a statute the court must not rely on judicial statements as to the construction, but must construe the words of the Act itself¹². However, where there is ambiguity or obscurity the court may refer to reports of Parliamentary debates as an aid to construction¹³. Particularly in extempore judgments, wide expressions must be read according to the subject matter; an isolated phrase must not be taken as if it were intended to expound the whole law on the subject¹⁴. The court's authoritative opinion must be distinguished from propositions assumed by the court to be correct for the purpose of disposing of the particular case¹⁵.

With effect from 9 April 2001, advocates are required to state, in respect of each authority that they wish to cite, the proposition of law that the authority demonstrates, and the parts of the judgment that support that proposition. If it is sought to cite more than one authority in support of a given proposition, advocates must state the reason for taking that course¹⁶. This demonstration is required to be contained in any skeleton argument and in any appellant's or respondent's notice in respect of each authority referred to in that skeleton or notice¹⁷. Any bundle or list of authorities prepared for the use of any court must bear a certification by the advocate responsible for arguing the case that these requirements have been complied with in respect of each authority included¹⁸.

2 The only thing in a judge's decision binding as an authority is the principle upon which the case was decided: Osborne to Rowlett(1880) 13 ChD 774 at 785. Judicial authority belongs not to the exact words used nor even to all the reasons given, but only to the principles accepted and applied as necessary grounds of the decision: Sir Frederick Pollock, quoted by Lord Denning in Close v Steel Co of Wales Ltd[1962] AC 367, [1961] 2 All ER 953, HL. The only use of authorities or decided cases is the establishment of some principle which the judge can follow out in deciding the case before him: Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v Hallett(1880) 13 ChD 696, CA; Smith v Harris[1939] 3 All ER 960, CA; Jolley v London Borough of Sutton [2000] 3 All ER 409, [2000] 1 WLR 1082, HL. 5 Every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, since the generality of expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the particular case: Quinn v Leatham[1901] AC 495 at 506, HL, per Lord Halsbury; Miller-Mead v Minister of Housing and Local Government[1963] 2 QB 196 at 236, [1963] 1 All ER 459 at 476, CA, per Diplock LJ.

NOTE 8--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(11) JUDICIAL DECISIONS AS AUTHORITIES/92. Dicta.

92. Dicta.

Statements which are not necessary to the decision, which go beyond the occasion and lay down a rule that is unnecessary for the purpose in hand are generally termed 'dicta'¹. They have no binding authority on another court, although they may have some persuasive efficacy². Mere passing remarks of a judge are known as 'obiter dicta', whilst considered enunciations of the judge's opinion on a point not arising for decision, and so not part of the ratio decidendi, have been termed 'judicial dicta'³. A third type of dictum may consist in a statement by a judge as to what has been done in other cases which have not been reported⁴.

Rights of property should not be upset merely because, when historically traced through the reports of centuries, they rest upon a dictum⁵, nor is it right to distrust a practice that follows on dicta when it is the practice and not the dicta that forms the binding authority⁶. Even dicta of individual members of the House of Lords, although of great weight, are not of binding authority⁷, but, when dicta have been expressed unanimously by all the judges of a Divisional Court, it would not be seemly for the judges of another Divisional Court not to follow them⁸. Interlocutory observations by members of a court during the argument, while of persuasive weight, are not judicial pronouncements and do not decide anything⁹.

It is dangerous in the exercise of discretion to take a reported case as a guide for that exercise in another case¹⁰. The Court of Appeal may lay down maxims to guide judges in exercising discretion, but will not compel them to follow them¹¹, although an exercise of discretion is always subject to review¹².

1 There is no justification for regarding as obiter dictum a reason given by a judge for his decision because he has given another reason also: Jacobs v LCC [1950] AC 361 at 369, [1950] 1 All ER 737 at 741, HL, per Lord Simonds. 93. Decisions on matters of fact.

Except as between the parties or their privies, decisions upon matters of fact are not binding on any other court¹, even when given by the House of Lords². When a previous case has not laid down any new principle, but has merely decided that a particular set of facts illustrates an existing rule, there are few more fertile sources of fallacy than to erect a previous decision into a governing precedent merely because it contains what is simply resemblance of circumstances³; but a case may be of use to show the way in which judges regard facts⁴, and a decision that certain legal consequences follow from certain facts is binding in another case raising substantially similar facts⁵.

A decision on a question of foreign law is not binding, for such a question is a question of fact to be decided in each case on the actual evidence in that case⁶.

94. Quantum of damages.

It is an important function of the Court of Appeal to set guidelines as to the quantum of damages appropriate for compensation in respect of various types of commonly occurring injuries, in order to assist both judges at first instance and the parties in assessing the likely level of award¹. Thus, decisions as to the quantum of damages in similar circumstances (particularly those of the Court of Appeal) may be cited to a judge of first instance if, in his discretion, he permits them to be cited². The choice of the right figure for damages, particularly in personal injuries cases, is empirical and in practice results from a general consensus of opinion of among those tribunals which award damages; when all proper allowance has been made for differing circumstances the sum awarded to one person should not be out of all proportion to the sum awarded to another in respect of similar injuries³.

In cases where the quantum of compensatory damages is assessed by a jury (particularly in cases of defamation), they may be told of the conventional compensatory scales awarded for particular types of personal injury, in order to provide them with guidance and as a check on the reasonableness of the award which they are contemplating⁴. Moreover, in cases of malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, the judge should give the jury an indication and guidance as to the appropriate brackets for the quantum of compensatory, aggravated and exemplary damages⁵.

95. House of Lords decisions.

The decisions of the House of Lords¹ upon questions of law are normally considered by the House to be binding upon itself², but because too rigid adherence to precedent may lead to injustice in a particular case and unduly restrict the proper development of the law the House will depart from a previous decision when it appears right to do so³, although it bears in mind the danger of disturbing retrospectively the basis upon which contracts, property settlements and fiscal arrangements have been entered into and the especial need for certainty⁴ as to the criminal law⁵. When a broad principle has been clearly decided by the House, the decision should not be weakened or frittered away by fine distinctions⁶, and an erroneous decision of the House upon a question of law can be set right only by Act of Parliament⁷. However, a decision of the House of Lords may be set aside on the ground that there is a real danger or reasonable apprehension or suspicion of bias⁸.

A decision of the House of Lords occasioned by members of the House being equally divided is as binding on the House and on all inferior tribunals as if it had been unanimous⁹. Decisions of the House of Lords are binding on every court inferior to it¹⁰. It is not open to the Court of Appeal to advise judges to ignore House of Lords decisions on the ground that they were decided per incuriam or are unworkable¹¹; but if there is no discernible ratio decidendi the Court of Appeal may adopt any reasoning which appears to it correct provided it supports the actual decision of the House¹².

1 The decisions of the Committee for Privileges are not judgments, and are not binding in another claim, even though the circumstances attending the claim and the point of law arising upon it may be precisely the same: Re Wiltes' Peerage Claim (1869) LR 4 HL 126; Viscountess Rhondda's Claim [1922] 2 AC 339, HL; and see COURTS; PEERAGES AND DIGNITIES. Dicta of individual members of the House are not, however, of binding authority: see PARA 92 the text to note 7. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. See also eg R (on the application of Purdy) v DPP [2009] EWCA Civ 92, [2009] All ER (D) 197 (Feb) (following an earlier House of Lords decision rather than a conflicting decision of the European Court of Human Rights). The reasons were (1) that a House of Lords decision establishes the law so as to bind all subjects of the Crown, including the law lords, and can be altered only by Parliament (Beamish v Beamish (1861) 9 HL Cas 274); and (2) that the rule was needed to provide the law with desirable certainty (London Tramways Co v LCC [1898] AC 375, HL). See generally Kneller (Publishing, Printing and Promotions) Ltd v DPP [1973] AC 435, [1972] 2 All ER 898, HL. However, the fact that an earlier case is indistinguishable on its facts does not require the House to follow the result in an earlier case whilst ignoring its reasoning: Chancery Lane Safe Deposit and Offices Co Ltd v IRC [1966] AC 85, [1966] 1 All ER 1, HL.

3 A previous decision should not be departed from merely because the House considers that it was wrongly decided (Fitzleet Estates Ltd v Cherry (Inspector of Taxes) [1977] 3 All ER 996, [1977] 1 WLR 1345, HL) or that it was illogical (The Johanna Oldendorff [1974] AC 479, [1973] 3 All ER 148, HL) or, generally, where questions of construction are involved (Jones v Secretary of State for Social Services [1972] AC 944, [1972] 1 All ER 145, HL). A previous decision may, however, be departed from where it has proved unduly restrictive of proper legal development and in changed circumstances is no longer adequate (British Railways Board v Herrington [1972] AC 877, [1972] 1 All ER 749, HL), or where it causes uncertainty or inconvenience in practice (The Johanna Oldendorff [1974] AC 479, [1973] 3 All ER 148, HL; cf Public Trustee v IRC [1960] AC 398, [1960] 1 All ER 1, HL), or where fresh considerations of real substance have since emerged (Miliangos v George Frank (Textiles) Ltd [1976] AC 443, [1975] 3 All ER 801, HL). In Scruttons Ltd v Midland Silicones Ltd [1962] AC 446, [1962] 1 All ER 1, HL (decided before the House determined that in proper cases it might depart from previous decisions), Lord Reid suggested that it could properly question or limit a previous decision which was obscure, or out of line with other authorities or established principles, or wider than was necessary for the decision. In this case the connection between the appeal judge and the intervening party was of such a nature that he could not be seen to be impartial and therefore had to be disqualified; the decision had to be set aside, and the matter remitted to a differently constituted committee. An appellate court in a dominion, dependency or colony regulated by English law is bound to follow a decision of the House of Lords (Robins v National Trust Co [1927] AC 515, PC) unless the law there has properly developed in such a way that to follow the House of Lords decision would compel a change in what had become a well-settled judicial approach (Australian Consolidated Press Ltd v Uren [1969] 1 AC 590, [1967] 3 All ER 523, PC). A House of Lords decision construing the words of a modern British statute is binding on the Privy Council and on colonial courts, where the same wording is used in the local statute or ordinance: de Lasala v de Lasala [1980] AC 546, [1979] 2 All ER 1146, PC.

UPDATE

95 House of Lords decisions

NOTE 1--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(11) JUDICIAL DECISIONS AS AUTHORITIES/96. Court of Appeal decisions.

96. Court of Appeal decisions.

The decisions of the Court of Appeal¹ upon questions of law must be followed by Divisional Courts² and courts of first instance³, and, as a general rule, are binding on the Court of Appeal⁴ until a contrary determination has been arrived at by the House of Lords⁵. There are, however, three exceptions to this rule⁶; thus (1) the Court of Appeal is entitled and bound to decide which of two conflicting decisions of its own it will follow⁷; (2) it is bound to refuse to follow a decision of its own which, although not expressly overruled, cannot, in its opinion, stand with a decision of the House of Lords⁸; and further is not bound by one of its decisions if the House of Lords has decided the case on different grounds, ruling that the issue decided by the Court of Appeal did not arise for decision⁹; and (3) the Court of Appeal is not bound to follow a decision of its own if given per incuriam¹⁰. Unlike the House of Lords, the Court of Appeal does not have liberty to review its own earlier decisions¹¹.

A decision is given per incuriam when the court has acted in ignorance of a previous decision of its own or of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction which covered the case before it, in which case it must decide which case to follow¹²; or when it has acted in ignorance of a House of Lords decision, in which case it must follow that decision¹³; or when the decision is given in ignorance of the terms of a statute or rule having statutory force¹⁴, or when, in rare and exceptional cases, it is satisfied that the earlier decision involved a manifest slip or error¹⁵ and there is no real prospect of a further appeal to the House of Lords¹⁶. A decision should not be treated as given per incuriam, however, simply because of a deficiency of parties¹⁷, or because the court had not the benefit of the best argument¹⁸, and, as a general rule, the only cases in which decisions should be held to be given per incuriam are those given in ignorance of some inconsistent statute or binding authority¹⁹. Even if a decision of the Court of Appeal has misinterpreted a previous decision of the House of Lords, the Court of Appeal must follow its previous decision and leave the House of Lords to rectify the mistake²⁰.

A decision of the Court of Appeal occasioned by the members of the court being equally divided is not binding on the Court of Appeal²¹, as there is no common law or statutory rule to oblige a court to bow to its own decisions, and a court only does so on grounds of judicial comity, which does not exist where a court is equally divided²². It is undesirable that different divisions of the Court of Appeal should say different things in relation to the same matter²³.

A full Court of Appeal has no greater powers than a division of the court and, except in the cases mentioned above, has no power to overrule a previous decision of a division of the court²⁴. Where, however, there is an apparent conflict between two previous decisions of the court, it is not uncommon for the matter to be argued before a full court as the decision of such a court carries greater weight²⁵.

In its criminal jurisdiction the Court of Appeal applies the same principles as on the civil side, but recognises that there are exceptions²⁶ (a) where the applicant is in prison and in the full court's opinion wrongly so²⁷; (b) where the court thinks that the law was misunderstood or misapplied²⁸; and (c) where the full court is carrying out its duty to lay down principles and guidelines in relation to sentencing²⁹. The full Court of Appeal is not precluded by its own rule of stare decisis in respect of final orders from overriding an interlocutory order of two lords justices which the court considers to be wrong³⁰, but decisions of a two judge court now have the same authority as a three judge court³¹.

As a general rule the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland follows decisions of the Court of Appeal in England on the construction of a statute³².

Where an asylum applicant's counsel conceded, on the basis of a Court of Appeal decision in an unconnected case, that the applicant could not show that she had suffered persecution for a Convention reason, and the House of Lords subsequently reversed the Court of Appeal decision on which counsel had based the concession, the Court of Appeal subsequently held that she should not be bound by counsel's concession³³.

1 For present purposes the Court of Appeal may be considered as co-ordinate with the former Court of Appeal in Chancery (Re South Durham Iron Co, Smith's Case (1879) 11 ChD 579, CA; Mills v Jennings (1880) 13 ChD 639, CA), the Lords Justices (Pledge v Carr [1895] 1 Ch 51, CA), and the Court of Exchequer (where its decision is treated as good law by the Court of Appeal in Chancery) (Hanau v Ehrlich [1911] 2 KB 1056, CA; on appeal [1912] AC 39, HL: see note 17). A decision of the Exchequer Chamber binds the Court of Appeal: Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co v Hart [1929] AC 631, PC. It seems that a decision of the Lord Chancellor sitting alone did not bind the Court of Appeal: see Wheeldon v Burrows (1879) 12 ChD 31, CA; Ashworth v Munn (1880) 15 ChD 363, CA; Re Watts, Cornford v Elliott (1885) 29 ChD 947, CA; but see Gard v City of London Sewers Comrs (1885) 28 ChD 486, CA; Gibson v Fisher (1867) LR 5 Eq 51; Re Lloyd, Lloyd v Lloyd [1903] 1 Ch 385, CA. The former Court of Criminal Appeal and Court for Crown Cases Reserved are also co-ordinate: cf note 2.

2 R v Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, ex p Shaw [1951] 1 KB 711, [1951] 1 All ER 268, DC, where, however, the court did not apply a Court of Appeal decision which was inconsistent with earlier House of Lords decisions which had not been cited to the Court of Appeal; Read v Joannon (1890) 25 QBD 300. In a criminal matter a Divisional Court is bound by a decision of the former Court of Criminal Appeal (Russell v Smith [1958] 1 QB 27, [1957] 2 All ER 796, DC, per Lord Goddard CJ) or of the former Court for Crown Cases Reserved (Ruse v Read [1949] 1 KB 377, [1949] 1 All ER 398, DC). The Court for Crown Cases Reserved was succeeded by the Court of Criminal Appeal, which was in turn succeeded by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division). As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. At the date at which this volume states the law, no such day had been appointed.

3 Trimble v Hill (1879) 5 App Cas 342, PC; Carnell v Harrison [1916] 1 Ch 328; affd on another point [1916] 1 Ch 328 at 336, CA; Consett Industrial and Provident Society v Consett Iron Co [1922] 2 Ch 135, CA; Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC. Where a colonial statute is in the same terms as an English statute, a court of a dominion or colony should follow a Court of Appeal decision on the construction of the English statute: Trimble v Hill (1879) 5 App Cas 342, PC; Nadarajan Chettiar v Walauwa Mahatmee [1950] AC 481, PC. But where an appellate court in a dominion or colony regulated by English law differs from the Court of Appeal, it is not right to assume that the former court is wrong: Robins v National Trust Co [1927] AC 515, PC. It is the practice of the Australian courts to follow Court of Appeal decisions on questions of law and equity common to both countries, but those decisions do not bind the Privy Council: New South Wales Stamp Duties Comr v Pearse [1954] AC 91, [1954] 1 All ER 19, PC.

A judge of first instance should not say that a recent Court of Appeal decision was wrong: Lane v Willis [1972] 1 All ER 430, [1972] 1 WLR 326, CA. As to the discretion of a judge of first instance to adjourn a case pending the hearing of an appeal from a relevant Court of Appeal decision which binds him see Re Yates' Settlement Trusts, Yates v Paterson [1954] 1 All ER 619, [1954] 1 WLR 564, CA. A judge at first instance is bound by ex parte (without notice) decisions of the Court of Appeal: see Amanuel v Alexandros Shipping Co, The Alexandros P [1986] QB 464, [1986] 1 All ER 278.

4 Re South Durham Iron Co, Smith's Case (1879) 11 ChD 579, CA; The Vera Cruz (No 2) (1884) 9 PD 96, CA; affd sub nom Seward v The Vera Cruz 10 App Cas 59, HL; Velazquez Ltd v IRC [1914] 3 KB 458, CA; Speyer Bros v Rodriguez (1917) 87 LJB 171, CA (affd sub nom Rodriguez v Speyer Bros [1919] AC 59, HL); Consett Industrial and Provident Society v Consett Iron Co [1922] 2 Ch 135, CA; Wheeler v Wirrall Estates Ltd [1935] 1 KB 294, CA; Marshall v Lindsey County Council [1935] 1 KB 516, CA; and see Hughes v Oxenham [1913] 1 Ch 254, CA; Birchall v Birch, Crisp & Co [1913] 2 Ch 375, CA; Miliangos v George Frank (Textiles) Ltd [1975] QB 487, [1975] 1 All ER 1076, CA; affd [1976] AC 443, [1975] 3 All ER 801, HL; Gallie v Lee [1969] 2 Ch 17, [1969] 1 All ER 1062, CA; Barrington v Lee [1972] 1 QB 326, [1971] 3 All ER 1231, CA.

5 Trimble v Hill (1879) 5 App Cas 342, PC; Consett Industrial and Provident Society v Consett Iron Co [1922] 2 Ch 135, CA; Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA; affd [1946] AC 163, [1946] 1 All ER 98, HL. The rule, which applies to a full court of the Court of Appeal as it applies to the Court of Appeal as normally constituted (Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1946] AC 163, [1946] 1 All ER 98, HL), was reaffirmed expressly and unequivocally in Davis v Johnson [1979] AC 264, [1978] 1 All ER 1132, HL. The rule applies also to a Divisional Court (Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC; Melias Ltd v Preston [1957] 2 QB 380, [1957] 2 All ER 449, DC) and to a judge of first instance (Armstrong v Strain [1951] 1 TLR 856). See also Condé Nast Publications Ltd v Customs and Excise Comrs [2006] EWCA Civ 976, [2007] 2 CMLR 904.

In order that a decision may be treated as overruled, one must find either a decision of a superior court inconsistent with that arrived at in the case in question, or an expression of opinion on the part of the court as a whole that the case was wrongly decided on its own facts, and not merely that it ought not to be treated as an authority in a case arising out of different facts: Consett Industrial and Provident Society v Consett Iron Co [1922] 2 Ch 135, CA. See also A-G of St Christopher, Nevis and Anguilla v Reynolds [1980] AC 637, [1979] 3 All ER 129, PC.

6 Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA (where the exceptions are set out); affd [1946] AC 163, [1946] 1 All ER 98, HL. These are the only exceptions: Davis v Johnson [1979] AC 264, [1978] 1 All ER 1132, HL. This must be taken as nullifying earlier attempts to spell out further exceptions, eg in Worcester Works Finance Ltd v Cooden Engineering Co Ltd [1972] 1 QB 210, [1971] 3 All ER 708, CA (liberty to depart from earlier decision which had been disapproved by the Privy Council).

7 Ross Smith v Ross Smith [1961] P 39, [1961] 1 All ER 255, CA; revsd on another ground [1963] AC 280, [1962] 1 All ER 344, HL; Tiverton Estates Ltd v Wearwell Ltd [1975] Ch 146, [1974] 1 All ER 209, CA. See also Craddock v Hampshire County Council [1958] 1 All ER 449, [1958] 1 WLR 202, CA, where the court felt bound to accept the interpretation put on one of its decisions by another of its decisions; W and JB Eastwood Ltd v Herrod (Valuation Officer) [1968] 2 QB 923 at 934, [1968] 3 All ER 389 at 393, CA, where Lord Denning MR said that such a choice was to be preferred to the endless task of distinguishing the indistinguishable and reconciling the irreconcilable; affd [1971] AC 160, [1970] 1 All ER 774, HL; Cathrineholm A/S v Norequipment Trading Ltd [1972] 2 QB 314, [1972] 2 All ER 538, CA, where the preferred decision had not yet been reported.

8 It seems that this exception refers to a House of Lords decision which is subsequent to the Court of Appeal decision, as in Fitzsimmons v Ford Motor Co Ltd (Aero Engines) [1946] 1 All ER 429, CA; Wilson v Chatterton [1946] KB 360, [1946] 1 All ER 431, CA; Re Lambton's Marriage Settlement, May v IRC [1952] Ch 752, [1952] 2 All ER 201, CA; A and J Mucklow Ltd v IRC [1954] Ch 615, [1954] 2 All ER 508, CA; Browning v War Office [1963] 1 QB 750, [1962] 3 All ER 1089, CA. In Williams v Glasbrook Bros Ltd [1947] 2 All ER 884 at 885, CA, where the exception is referred to, the word 'subsequent' is used. An earlier House of Lords decision inconsistent with a later Court of Appeal decision, and not cited to the Court of Appeal, will render the Court of Appeal decision of no value as given per incuriam. But if the earlier House of Lords decision was cited to the Court of Appeal and expressly or impliedly distinguished by that court, a problem of some difficulty arises: see Noble v Southern Ry Co [1940] AC 583 at 598, [1940] 2 All ER 383 at 392, HL, where Lord Wright inclined to the view that the law laid down by the House of Lords should be followed.

9 Al-Mehdawi v Secretary of State for the Home Department [1990] 1 AC 876, sub nom R v Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex p Al-Mehdawi [1989] 1 All ER 777, CA; revsd on other grounds [1990] 1 AC 876, [1989] 3 All ER 843, HL.

10 See eg Industrial Properties (Barton Hill) Ltd v Associated Electrical Industries Ltd [1977] QB 580, [1977] 2 All ER 293, CA. The per incuriam rule does not only apply to Court of Appeal decisions; but it does not apply to a decision of an appellate court superior to that in which the rule is sought to be invoked: Cassell & Co Ltd v Broome [1972] AC 1027, [1972] 1 All ER 801, HL; Baker v R [1975] AC 774, [1975] 3 All ER 55, PC.

11 Practice Note (Judicial Precedent) [1966] 3 All ER 77, sub nom Practice Statement [1966] 1 WLR 1234, HL; Davis v Johnson [1979] AC 264, [1978] 1 All ER 1132, HL. However, the Court of Appeal is not precluded from referring a question to the European Court of Justice when that question has already been decided by an earlier Court of Appeal decision: Trent Taverns v Sykes [1999] NPC 9, (1999) Times, 5 March, CA. As to references to the European Court see PARA 1720 et seq.

Where the ratio of an earlier decision of the Court of Appeal is directly applicable to the circumstances of a case before the court but that decision has been wrongly distinguished in a later decision of the court, in principle it must be open to the court to apply the ratio of the earlier decision and to decline to follow the later decision: Starmark Enterprises Ltd v CPL Distribution Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 1252, [2002] Ch 306, [2002] 4 All ER 264.

12 Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA; R v Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, ex p Shaw [1951] 1 KB 711, [1951] 1 All ER 268, DC. In Farrell v Alexander [1976] QB 345 at 369, [1976] 1 All ER 129 at 145, CA, Scarman LJ translated 'per incuriam' as 'Homer nodded'. In Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC, Lord Goddard CJ said that a decision was given per incuriam when a case or statute had not been brought to the court's attention and the court gave the decision in ignorance or forgetfulness of the existence of the case or statute. However, a decision given in ignorance of an EU directive was not per incuriam: Duke v Reliance Systems Ltd [1988] QB 108, [1987] 2 All ER 858, CA; affd on different grounds on appeal sub nom Duke v GEC Reliance Ltd [1988] AC 618, [1988] 1 All ER 626, HL. - 26 It is not clear whether the emphatic reaffirmation of the strictures of Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA, in Davis v Johnson [1979] AC 264, [1978] 1 All ER 1132, HL (a civil case), extends to the Criminal Division of the Court of Appeal, but it is suggested that, subject to these three exceptions, it does. The first judgment in Davis v Johnson [1979] AC 264, [1978] 1 All ER 1132, HL, was given by Lord Diplock who, as Diplock LJ in R v Gould [1968] 2 QB 65, [1968] 1 All ER 849, CA, spelt out the exception summarised in head (b) in the text, and specifically accepted that it did not fall within any of the exceptions laid down in Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA. See also R v Charles [1976] 1 All ER 659, [1976] 1 WLR 248, CA; affd sub nom Metropolitan Police Comr v Charles [1977] AC 177, [1976] 3 All ER 112, HL.

UPDATE

96 Court of Appeal decisions

NOTE 2--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(11) JUDICIAL DECISIONS AS AUTHORITIES/97. Divisional Court decisions.

97. Divisional Court decisions.

A Divisional Court is generally bound by its own previous decisions¹, regardless of how many judges are sitting², with limited exceptions in criminal cases³, and when exercising its supervisory jurisdiction⁴, subject always to the per incuriam rule⁵. Faced with conflicting earlier decisions the court is free to decide which to follow⁶. Divisional Court decisions bind judges of first instance⁷, even of a different division⁸, but not the Employment Appeal Tribunal⁹.

1 Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC, per Lord Goddard CJ, who applied to that court the rule in Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA (see PARA 96); Harrison v Ridgway (1925) 133 LT 238; Phillips v Copping [1935] 1 KB 15, CA; Cogley v Sherwood [1959] 2 QB 311, [1959] 2 All ER 313, DC. Earlier dicta to the contrary (eg Kruse v Johnson [1898] 2 QB 91, DC) were made when the structure of the courts was very different.

3 See R v Taylor [1950] 2 KB 368, [1950] 2 All ER 170, CCA, and PARA 96 text to note 23.

4 R v Greater Manchester Coroner, ex p Tal [1985] QB 67, [1984] 3 All ER 240, in which the supervisory jurisdiction of the Divisional Court was analysed and the authority of Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC distinguished and, in the light of later developments, doubted. See also C (a minor) v DPP [1996] AC 1, [1994] 3 All ER 190, DC (overruled on other grounds [1996] AC 1 at 14, [1995] 2 All ER 43, HL).

5 Nicholas v Penny [1950] 2 KB 466, sub nom Penny v Nicholas [1950] 2 All ER 89, DC; Melias Ltd v Preston [1957] 2 QB 380, [1957] 2 All ER 449, DC. As to the per incuriam rule see PARA 96.

6 See eg Ratkinsky v Jacobs [1929] 1 KB 24, DC. Where two judges of a Divisional Court disagree, the modern practice is to treat the appeal as dismissed, and the old practice by which the junior judge withdrew his judgment is no longer followed: see COURTS.

7 Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC; John v John and Goff [1965] P 289, [1965] 2 All ER 222. The same exceptions apply as apply to Court of Appeal decisions, as laid down in Young v Bristol Aeroplane Co Ltd [1944] KB 718, [1944] 2 All ER 293, CA: John v John and Goff [1965] P 289, [1965] 2 All ER 222. The decisions of the old Court of Common Pleas sitting in banc probably bind a judge at first instance: Rondel v Worsley [1967] 1 QB 443, [1966] 1 All ER 467; affd on another point [1967] 1 QB 443, [1966] 3 All ER 657, CA; [1969] 1 AC 191, [1967] 3 All ER 993, HL; now overruled in so far as it laid down immunity for advocates against suits in negligence (see PARA 11 note 2).

9 See PARA 98 note 2.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/3. ORGANISATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL COURTS/(11) JUDICIAL DECISIONS AS AUTHORITIES/98. Decisions of co-ordinate courts.

98. Decisions of co-ordinate courts.

There is no statute or common law rule by which one court is bound¹ to abide by the decision of another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction². Where, however, a judge of first instance after consideration has come to a definite decision on a matter arising out of a complicated and difficult enactment, the opinion has been expressed that a second judge of first instance of co-ordinate jurisdiction should follow that decision³; and the modern practice is that a judge of first instance will as a matter of judicial comity⁴ usually follow the decision of another judge of first instance unless he is convinced that that judgment was wrong⁵. Where there are conflicting decisions of courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction the later decision is to be preferred if reached after full consideration of earlier decisions⁶.

1 For the view that decisions at nisi prius are not of binding authority see Church v Brown (1808) 15 Ves 258; Fentum v Pocock (1813) 5 Taunt 192; Forster v Baker [1910] 2 KB 636; Gelmini v Moriggia [1913] 2 KB 549; Green v Berliner as reported in [1936] 2 KB 477; see also R v Beynon [1957] 2 QB 111, [1957] 2 All ER 513, where Byrne J did not follow a previous decision of Devlin J in R v Roberts [1954] 2 QB 329, [1953] 2 All ER 340 at the same assizes, and Monmouthshire County Council v Smith [1956] 2 All ER 800, [1956] 1 WLR 1132, where Lynskey J felt himself compelled to differ from a judgment of Slade J given the previous week in Metropolitan Police District Receiver v Croydon Corp [1956] 2 All ER 785, [1956] 1 WLR 1113. He was held to have been right when the appeals were heard together at [1957] 2 QB 154, [1957] 1 All ER 78, CA.

2 The Vera Cruz (No 2) (1884) 9 PD 96, CA; Palmer v Johnson (1884) 13 QBD 351, CA. See Taylor v Burgess (1859) 5 H & N 1, and Casson v Churchley (1884) 53 LQB 335, for the opinion (doubted in Huddersfield Police Authority v Watson [1947] KB 842, [1947] 2 All ER 193, DC) that in a case where there is power to appeal the decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction is binding on another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. 99. Decisions followed for long time.

A long-standing decision of a judge of first instance ought to be followed by another judge of first instance, at least in a case involving the construction of a statute of some complexity, unless he is fully satisfied that the previous decision is wrong¹. Apart from any question as to the courts being of co-ordinate jurisdiction, a decision which has been followed for a long period of time and has been acted upon by persons in the formation of contracts or in the disposition of their property, or in the general conduct of affairs, or in legal procedure or in other ways, will generally be followed by courts of higher authority than the court establishing the rule, even though the court before which the matter arises afterwards might not have given the same decision had the question come before it originally².

The supreme appellate court will, however, not shrink from overruling a decision or series of decisions which establish a doctrine plainly outside a statute and outside the common law, when no title and no contract will be shaken, no person can complain, and no general course of dealing can be altered by the remedy of a mistake³; and, where the course of practice is founded upon an erroneous construction of an Act of Parliament, there is no principle which precludes at any rate that tribunal from correcting the error⁴, although the construction of a statute of doubtful meaning, once laid down and accepted for a long period of time, ought not to be altered unless the House of Lords can say positively that it is wrong and productive of inconvenience⁵. The Court of Appeal may, in a proper case, overrule long-standing decisions of the Divisional Court⁶.

In general the House of Lords will not overrule a long established course of decisions except in plain cases where serious inconvenience or injustice would follow from perpetuating an erroneous construction or ruling of law⁷. The same considerations do not apply where the decision, although followed, has been frequently questioned and doubted. In such a case it may be overruled by any court of superior jurisdiction⁸. Where the subsequent course of judicial decisions has disclosed weakness in the reasoning on which old authorities were based and practical injustice in the consequences that must flow from them, or when old authorities are otherwise plainly wrong, it is the duty of the House of Lords to overrule them⁹.

When, however, some words of doubtful meaning in a statute have received a clear judicial interpretation and the same words are repeated in a subsequent statute, the legislature must be taken to have read them on the second occasion according to the meaning given to them by that interpretation, and it is not then open to a higher court to reverse that interpretation¹⁰. This is merely a rule of construction for the guidance of the courts; it is not a presumption which the courts are bound to make¹¹.

9 For more than a century trials had been conducted on the hypothesis that there could only be a conviction for an affray if the acts were done in a public place, but the House of Lords held that a conviction for an affray in a private place could be upheld: Button v DPP, Swain v DPP [1966] AC 591, [1965] 3 All ER 587, HL. Where necessary the courts will find that forms of action etc which were once part of the common law have disappeared: see eg Neville v London Express Newspaper Ltd [1919] AC 368, HL (maintenance). Whilst such disappearances are more fittingly announced in the appellate courts than by judges of first instance, if a refusal to recognise obsolescence leads to a complete absurdity, a judge in any court would have to notice it: Winchester v Fleming [1958] 1 QB 259, [1957] 3 All ER 711; revsd on another ground [1958] 3 All ER 51n, CA (harbouring).

The Employment Appeal Tribunal¹ is bound by decisions of the House of Lords and the Court of Appeal, but not by decisions of the High Court, the former National Industrial Relations Court or its own previous decisions, although such decisions all have great persuasive authority². An election court³ is bound by decisions of the Court of Appeal⁴. Pensions appeal tribunals are bound by decisions of the High Court⁵. In practice the Lands Tribunal⁶ follows its own previous decisions⁷, but they should never be regarded as binding, especially where the decision was given by a single member⁸. The Transport Tribunal⁹ does not regard its own previous decisions as binding, but as having persuasive force only¹⁰. Decisions of the High Court given on points of law in social security matters made between 1978 and 1980 are not binding on Social Security Commissioners, in whom the former jurisdiction was vested thereafter¹¹. The rules relating to precedent in ecclesiastical courts are discussed elsewhere in this work¹².

100 Precedent in other courts and tribunals

NOTE 2--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

101. European Court of Justice decisions.

The European Court of Justice tends to follow its own previous decisions, but is not bound to do so¹.

A ruling of the European Court on a question of the interpretation of a Community treaty or the validity or interpretation of another Community instrument made at the request of a domestic court of a member state² is strictly binding only on that domestic court in the case in which the request was made³; it does not bind the domestic court in any other case⁴, although if a judge is faced with a question of interpretation which has already been answered by the European Court in another case he ought to follow that answer⁵, for the procedure is designed to safeguard the uniform judicial interpretation of Community law⁶. The European Court has generally given only broad guidance on interpretation, leaving the domestic court to apply the interpretation to the particular case before it⁷. However, the doctrine of binding precedent has now developed to the stage where the European Court has held, without seeking to derogate from a domestic court's power to refer a case to it, that national courts should regard themselves as bound by decisions of the European Court relating to the interpretation of particular instruments or other matters of Community law⁸.

Nevertheless, any question arising before an English court as to the meaning or effect of a Community treaty or the validity, meaning or effect of another Community instrument is declared by English statute to be a question of law to be determined by the English court in accordance with the principles laid down by, and any relevant decision of, the European Court⁹. Furthermore, where relief is available under European law but is precluded by a rule of national law, that rule must be set aside¹⁰.

102. European Court of Human Rights decisions.

A court or tribunal determining a question which has arisen in connection with a Convention right¹ must take into account any judgment, decision, declaration or advisory opinion of the European Court of Human Rights and any opinion of the European Human Rights Commission given in a report adopted under the European Convention on Human Rights², whenever made or given, so far as, in the opinion of the court or tribunal, it is relevant to the proceedings in which that question has arisen³. Evidence of any judgment, decision, declaration or opinion of which account may have to be taken is to be given in proceedings before any court or tribunal in such manner as may be provided by rules of court or, in the case of proceedings before a tribunal, rules made for these purposes⁴.

Because of the status of such authority, cases decided in the organs of the European Convention on Human Rights are not regarded as 'foreign' authorities for the purposes of citation by advocates in English courts⁵.

The European Court of Human Rights is not bound by its previous judgments; however it usually follows and applies its own precedents, such a course being in the interests of legal certainty and the orderly development of the Convention case law. Nevertheless, this would not prevent the court from departing from an earlier decision if it was persuaded that there were cogent reasons for doing so. Such a departure might, for example, be warranted in order to ensure that the interpretation of the Convention reflects societal changes and remains in line with present-day conditions⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'Convention right' see the Human Rights Act 1998 s 1; and JUDICIAL REVIEW vol 61 (2010) PARA 651; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

2 Ie adopted under the European Convention on Human Rights (Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969)) (the European Convention on Human Rights) art 31: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

3 Human Rights Act 1998 s 2(1)(a), (b). See R (on the application of Alconbury Developments Ltd v Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [2001] UKHL 23 at [26], [2003] 2 AC 295 at [26], [2001] 2 All ER 929 at [26] per Lord Slynn of Hadley ('Although the [Human Rights Act 1998] does not provide that a national court is bound by these decisions it is obliged to take account of them so far as they are relevant. In the absence of some special circumstances . . . the court should follow any clear and constant jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights. If it does not do so there is at least a possibility that the case will go to that court which is likely in the ordinary case to follow its own constant jurisprudence.'). See, however, R (on the application of Purdy) v DPP [2009] EWCA Civ 92, [2009] All ER (D) 197 (Feb) (following an earlier House of Lords decision rather than a conflicting decision of the European Court of Human Rights).

A court or tribunal is also required to take into account any decision of the Commission in accordance with the European Convention on Human Rights art 26 or art 27(2) or any decision of the Committee of Ministers taken under art 46: Human Rights Act 1998 s 2(1)(c), (d).

On 1 November 1998 Protocol No 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby (Strasbourg, 11 May 1994; ETS no 155) entered into force and the European Commission and Court of Human Rights were replaced with a new permanent Court although the Commission continued until 31 October 1999 to deal with those cases declared admissible prior to the date of entry into force.

4 Human Rights Act 1998 s 2(2), (3). Such rules are to be made by the Lord Chancellor or the Secretary of State, in relation to any proceedings outside Scotland, by the Secretary of State, in relation to proceedings in Scotland, or by a Northern Ireland department, in relation to proceedings before a tribunal in Northern Ireland which deals with transferred matters and for which no rules otherwise made for this purpose are in force: see the Human Rights Act 1998 s 2(3) (amended by SI 2003/1887 and SI 2005/3429). If it is necessary for a party to give evidence at a hearing of an authority referred to in the Human Rights Act 1998 s 2, the authority to be cited must be an authoritative and complete report and the party must give to the court and any other party a list of the authorities he intends to cite and copies of the reports not less than three days before the hearing: Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 8.1(1), (2). Copies of the complete original texts issued by the European Court of Human Rights and the Commission, either paper based or from the court's judgment database (HUDOC), which is available on the Internet, may be used: Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions relating to Hearings PD 39A para 8.1(3).

6 See Cossey v United Kingdom (1990) 13 EHRR 622, [1990] ECHR 10843/84, ECtHR. This sentiment has been repeated in numerous cases, most recently in Coster v United Kingdom [2001] ECHR 24876/94, (2001) Times, 30 January, ECtHR: 'The court considers that, while it is not formally bound to follow any of its previous judgments, it is in the interests of legal certainty, foreseeability and equality before the law that it should not depart, without good reason, from precedents laid down in previous cases. Since the Convention is first and foremost a system for the protection of human rights, the court must however have regard to the changing conditions in contracting states and respond, for example, to any emerging consensus as to the standards to be achieved . . .' In Tyrer v United Kingdom (1978) 2 EHRR 1, [1978] ECHR 5856/72, ECtHR the court stated that 'the Convention is a living instrument which . . . must be interpreted in the light of present-day conditions' and this idea was reiterated more recently in V v United Kingdom (1999) 30 EHRR 121, [1999] ECHR 24888/94, ECtHR ('since the Convention is a living instrument, it is legitimate when deciding whether a certain measure is acceptable under one of its provisions to take account of the standards prevailing amongst the member states of the Council of Europe').

103. Privy Council decisions.

As a general rule the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are not theoretically binding on English courts¹, but are treated as being of great weight and are commonly followed² in similar cases³. The Privy Council does not act on the rule that it is bound by its own previous decisions, but it will only differ with the greatest hesitation⁴. Where the rationes decidendi of two Privy Council decisions conflict with one another and the later does not purport to overrule the earlier, the colonial courts may choose which ratio decidendi they will follow⁵.

1 London Joint Stock Bank v Macmillan and Arthur [1918] AC 777, HL; Service v Sundell (1929) 99 LJKB 55, CA. This rule has been applied in the Court of Appeal in Leask v Scott (1877) 2 QBD 376, CA; The City of Chester (1884) 9 PD 182, CA; Greenlands Ltd v Wilmshurst and London Association for Protection of Trade [1913] 3 KB 507, CA; revsd on another point sub nom London Association for Protection of Trade v Greenlands Ltd [1916] 2 AC 15, HL, where, however, Earl Loreburn said at 28 that a Privy Council decision 'is of equal authority with our own'; Stephenson v Thompson [1924] 2 KB 240, CA; Fanton v Denville [1932] 2 KB 309, CA; and in the High Court in Ranelagh v Ranelagh (1893) 41 WR 549; Dulieu v White & Sons [1901] 2 KB 669; Gore-Booth v Bishop of Manchester [1920] 2 KB 412, CA; Diamond Alkali Export Corp v Bourgeois [1921] 3 KB 443; Venn v Todesco [1926] 2 KB 227; Lynn v Bamber [1930] 2 KB 72; Low v Fry (1935) 152 LT 585; Re Vitamins Ltd's Application [1955] 3 All ER 827, [1956] 1 WLR 1; Smith v Leech Brain & Co Ltd [1962] 2 QB 405, [1961] 3 All ER 1159; Doughty v Turner Manufacturing Co Ltd [1964] 1 QB 518, [1964] 1 All ER 98, CA; Worcester Works Finance Ltd v Cooden Engineering Co Ltd [1972] 1 QB 210, [1971] 3 All ER 708, CA.

Where, however, the Privy Council exercises jurisdiction as an English appellate court, eg in ecclesiastical or prize matters, its decisions are binding on courts of first instance: see eg Combe v Edwards (1877) 2 PD 354. As to precedent in ecclesiastical courts see ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

2 Nevertheless in Port Line Ltd v Ben Line Steamers Ltd [1958] 2 QB 146, [1958] 1 All ER 787, Diplock J declined to follow Lord Strathcona Steamship Co Ltd v Dominion Coal Co Ltd [1926] AC 108, PC, on the ground that it was wrongly decided.

3 See the decisions cited in note 1. A decision of the Privy Council, when it is the highest court of appeal from the courts of the dominions and colonies, is binding on all such courts (Robins v National Trust Co [1927] AC 515, PC), even though the decision can no longer be regarded as a guiding authority in England, Scotland or Ireland (Stevenson v Bagham [1922] NZLR 225; Hogan v City of Regina [1924] 2 WWR 307; Penman v Winnipeg Electric Rly Co [1925] 1 WWR 156; Johnson v Commonwealth (1927) 27 SRNSW 133), unless the decision is on a subject governed by English law and there is a subsequent decision of the supreme tribunal to settle English law, namely, the House of Lords (see PARA 95), in which the House differs from the Privy Council and points out in express terms in what respect the Privy Council erred; in such circumstances it is the duty of courts overseas to apply the law as settled by the House of Lords (Will v Bank of Montreal [1931] 2 WWR 364). The view was expressed in Negro v Pietro's Bread Co Ltd [1933] OR 112 that a Privy Council decision is binding only on the courts of the dominion, dependency or colony from which the appeal is taken, but this view is contrary to the opinion expressed in Fatuma Binti Mohamed Bin Salim Bakhshuwan v Mohamed Bin Salim Bakhshuwan [1952] AC 1, PC. In Australian Consolidated Press Ltd v Uren [1969] 1 AC 590, [1967] 3 All ER 523, PC, the Privy Council held that the decision of the House of Lords in Rookes v Barnard [1964] AC 1129, [1964] 1 All ER 367, HL, was not binding on the High Court of Australia, since before that decision it had been settled law in Australia that the award of exemplary damages in libel cases was not so circumscribed as to be permissible only within the limits of the categories defined in Rookes v Barnard [1964] AC 1129, [1964] 1 All ER 367, HL. In exceptional circumstances, a Privy Council decision may be regarded as displacing an earlier decision of the House of Lords on the same issue: R v James, R v Karimi [2006] EWCA Crim 14, [2006] QB 588, [2006] 1 All ER 759 (composition of Privy Council and belief that it was making definitive statement on the issue demonstrated inferior courts were to follow that ruling in future). As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. At the date at which this volume states the law, no such day had been appointed.

104. Scottish and Irish decisions.

Decisions of the Scottish and Irish courts are not binding upon English courts, although entitled to the highest respect¹. On questions of principle it is desirable that the laws of England and Scotland should be uniform and that a decision of the House of Lords, when founded on principle and not on authority, should be regarded as applicable to both countries, unless the House itself says otherwise². There is a well-settled practice that in revenue and taxation matters courts of first instance in England endeavour to keep in line with the courts of Scotland³. Further, an English court ought to follow the unanimous judgment of the higher Scottish and Northern Ireland courts, where the question is one which turns upon the construction of a statute which extends to those countries as well as to England, leaving it to be reviewed, if thought fit, by the appeal court⁴, as it is desirable that interpretations should be avoided which result in one meaning in one country and a different one in another⁵.

105. Overseas decisions.

A decision of an overseas court in a common law country¹ is not of course binding on an English court, but may be useful as a guide to the court to which it is cited as to what its decision ought to be². Thus, for example, great respect is paid to the views of eminent judges of the United States Supreme Court³ and to decisions of the highest tribunal of the State of New York⁴. English courts should be in keeping with United States courts on carriage by sea⁵ and carriage by air⁶, although if English law proved to be different, effect would have to be given to the difference, whatever the inconvenience⁷.

It is desirable that the great common law jurisdictions should not differ lightly⁸, particularly on so universal a matter as commercial law⁹, or the measure of damages¹⁰, or remoteness of damage¹¹, or interpretation¹², or privilege¹³, or patent law¹⁴.

1 The conclusions of French courts upon articles of a code similar to the civil code of Quebec are not of binding authority in Quebec although entitled to great respect: Laverdure v Du Tremblay [1937] AC 666, PC.

2 Cases decided in other jurisdictions can, if properly used, be a valuable source of law in this jurisdiction. At the same time, however, such authority should not be cited without proper consideration of whether it does indeed add to the existing body of law: Practice Note [2001] 2 All ER 510, sub nom Practice Direction (citation of authorities) [2001] 1 WLR 1001, CA, para 9.1. With effect from 9 April 2001, any advocate who seeks to cite an authority from another jurisdiction must (1) comply, in respect of that authority, with the rules set out in para 8 (see PARA 91); (2) indicate in respect of each authority what that authority adds that is not to be found in authority in this jurisdiction; or, if there is said to be justification for adding to domestic authority, what that justification is; (3) certify that there is no authority in this jurisdiction that precludes the acceptance by the court of the proposition that the foreign authority is said to establish: para 9.2. For the avoidance of doubt, paras 9.1 and 9.2 do not apply to cases decided in either the Court of Justice of the European Communities or the organs of the European Convention on Human Rights: see para 9.3. 106. Reports of decisions as authorities.

Rules have been laid down governing what types of material may be cited as an authority and the manner in which any such material ought to be cited¹. However, it remains the duty of advocates to draw the attention of the court to any authority not cited by an opponent which is adverse to the case being advanced².

Reports of decisions made by solicitors and those who have a right of audience in the Supreme Court now have the same authority as if made by a barrister³. Formerly, a report of a decision might be cited as an authority only when authenticated by a barrister⁴. The authorised reports should be cited in preference to others⁵ and, when there is a difference between a report of the same case in the authorised reports and in some other series, it is assumed that the former report has been revised by the judge concerned and represents his authoritative opinion⁶. In the House of Lords, transcripts of unreported judgments should only be cited when they contain an authoritative statement of a relevant principle of law not to be found in a reported case or are necessary for the understanding of some other authority⁷.

The standing of the various sets of reports differs and from time to time judges have commented on the quality, or lack of it, of a particular set of reports, although it is pertinent to note that in earlier days a judge who wished to avoid following a case could always maintain that it had been badly reported⁸.

Newspaper reports, when verified by a barrister or other authoritative reporter⁹, may be read when other reports are not available¹⁰, but there is grave danger in citing a newspaper report of a case decided on its own particular facts and citing observations of judges in that case as though they laid down some general rule of law¹¹. If there is no report in any authorised series of reports a shorthand report may only be looked at with leave¹². A record of proceedings made by mechanical means is admissible in the same way as the notes of an official shorthand writer¹³. Practice notes, being directions given without argument, were formerly held to have very little judicial force¹⁴, but this is no longer so and the Civil Procedure Rules may, instead of providing for any matter, refer to provision made or to be made about that matter by practice directions¹⁵. Text books¹⁶ by authors living and dead are frequently cited in court and the court will give credit to the views of any reputable author. They have however no binding authority¹⁷. Hansard may be referred to as an aid to the construction of a statute, but only in limited circumstances where there is ambiguity or obscurity¹⁸.

1 See Practice Note [2001] 2 All ER 510, sub nom Practice Direction (citation of authorities) [2001] 1 WLR 1001, CA. Judgments relating to applications attended by one party only, applications for permission to appeal, decisions on applications that only decide that the application is arguable, and county court cases, unless cited in order to illustrate the conventional measure of damages in a personal injury case or cited in a county court in order to demonstrate current authority at that level on an issue in respect of which no decision at a higher level of authority is available, may not be cited before any court unless the judgment in question clearly indicates that it purports to establish a new principle or to extend the present law. In respect of judgments delivered after 9 April 2001, that indication must take the form of an express statement to that effect; in respect of judgments delivered before that date, that indication must be present in or clearly deducible from the language used in the judgment: paras 6.1, 6.2. These categories of judgment will be kept under review, such review to include consideration of adding to the categories: para 6.3.

5 The House of Lords requires this to be done in cases before it: see Practice Directions and Standing Orders applicable to Civil Appeals (2001) direction 17.3. There is no practice in the House of Lords that in revenue cases Tax Cases reports should be used instead of the authorised reports (National Bank of Greece SA v Westminster Bank Executor and Trustee Co (Channel Islands) Ltd [1970] 3 All ER 656n, [1970] 1 WLR 1400, HL, per Lord Hailsham of St Marylebone C); but references to the case, if any, in the Law Reports, should be supplied (see Bray (Inspector of Taxes) v Best [1989] 1 All ER 969, [1989] 1 WLR 167, HL; and Practice Directions and Standing Orders applicable to Civil Appeals (2001) direction 17.3). As to the citation of cases from the Law Reports in preference to others in the Court of Appeal and the High Court see Practice Note [2001] 1 All ER 193, [2001] 1 WLR 194, CA, para 3.1. It is permissible to cite a judgment reported in a series of reports, including those of the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, by means of a copy of a reproduction of the judgment in electronic form that has been authorised by the publisher of the relevant series, provided that (1) the report is presented to the court in an easily legible form (a 12-point font is preferred but a 10 or 11-point font is acceptable); and (2) the advocate presenting the report is satisfied that it has not been reproduced in a garbled form from the data source. In any case of doubt the court will rely on the printed text of the report (unless the editor of the report has certified that an electronic version is more accurate because it corrects an error contained in an earlier printed text of the report): para 3.2. See also Practice Direction [2002] 1 All ER 351, which extends the application of Practice Note [2001] 1 All ER 193 with regard to the High Court.

As to the citation of unreported judgments see the comments of Laddie J in Michaels v Taylor Woodrow Developments Ltd [2001] Ch 493, [2000] 4 All ER 645. See also note 8.

As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is abolished and the new Supreme Court of the United Kingdom is established: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Pt 3 (ss 23-60); and COURTS. At the date at which this volume states the law, no such day had been appointed.

Where an advocate holds himself out to be competent in a particular field of law, he must bring and keep himself up to date with recent authority in that field. Such authority is not necessarily that which can only be found in the specialist reports, but rather authority which has been reported in the general law reports. Thus if a solicitors' firm or barristers' chambers takes either the Weekly Law Reports or the All England Law Reports but not both, they should have systems in place enabling them to keep themselves up to date with cases which have been considered worthy of reporting in the other general series. If that is not done, judges may reach the wrong decision through the default of the advocates appearing before them. Moreover, where a case has been reported, it is not satisfactory to refer to it in court by means of a Court of Appeal transcript. The purpose of cases being reported is, amongst other things, to assist the court and advocates by means of listing the cases that have been referred to and also through providing very helpful headnotes: Copeland v Smith [2000] 1 All ER 457, [2000] 1 WLR 1371, CA.

UPDATE

106 Reports of decisions as authorities

NOTES 3, 5--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/4. PRE-COMMENCEMENT PROCEDURES/(1) THE PRE-ACTION PROTOCOLS/107. The pre-action protocols practice direction.

4. PRE-COMMENCEMENT PROCEDURES

(1) THE PRE-ACTION PROTOCOLS

107. The pre-action protocols practice direction.

A practice direction¹ introduces and approves eight protocols² governing pre-action conduct in cases involving personal injury³, clinical disputes (medical negligence claims)⁴, construction and engineering disputes⁵, defamation⁶, professional negligence⁷, judicial review⁸, personal injury resulting in disease or illness⁹, housing disrepair¹⁰ and housing possession¹¹. Moreover, the practice direction applies the spirit of those protocols to other categories of case, by providing that, in cases not covered by any approved protocol, the court will expect the parties to act reasonably in exchanging information and documents relevant to the claim and generally in trying to avoid the necessity for the start of proceedings¹². The practice direction and the approved protocols are all in accordance with the overriding objective¹³.

On 12 October 2001, the Lord Chancellor's Department published proposals for the introduction of a general pre-action protocol for civil disputes which would apply in most claims where an approved protocol does not exist¹⁴.

1 See Practice Direction--Protocols.

2 As to the meaning of 'pre-action protocol' see PARA 13.

3 The Pre-action Protocol for Personal Injury Claims (1999) is intended to apply to all claims which include a claim for personal injury (except industrial disease claims) and to the entirety of those claims, not only to the personal injury element of a claim which also includes, for instance, property damage: para 2.2. The protocol is primarily designed for those road traffic, tripping and slipping and accident at work cases which include an element of personal injury with a value of less than £15,000 which are likely to be allocated to the fast track: para 2.3. The protocol came into force on 26 April 1999: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1. As to disclosure of medical reports under the protocol see Carlson v Townsend [2001] EWCA Civ 511, [2001] 3 All ER 663, [2001] 1 WLR 2415. As to allocation to the fast track see PARAS 268, 286 et seq.

4 The Pre-action Protocol for the Resolution of Clinical Disputes (1999) was the first major initiative of the Clinical Disputes Forum, a multi-disciplinary body formed in 1997, and was drawn up by a working party of that forum. The general aims of the protocol are to 'maintain/restore the protected party/healthcare provider relationship and to resolve as many disputes as possible without litigation': para 2.1. The protocol came into force on 26 April 1999: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

5 The Pre-action Protocol for Construction and Engineering Disputes (2000) applies to all construction and engineering disputes (including professional negligence claims against architects, engineers and quantity surveyors) with the exception of proceedings (1) for the enforcement of the decision of an adjudicator to whom a dispute has been referred pursuant to the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 s 108; (2) including a claim for interim injunctive relief; (3) the subject of a claim for summary judgment pursuant to CPR Pt 24 (see PARA 524 et seq); or (4) relating to the same or substantially the same issues as have been the subject of recent adjudication under the 1996 Act, or some other formal alternative dispute resolution procedure: see the Pre-action Protocol for Construction and Engineering Disputes (2000) paras 1.1, 1.2. The protocol came into force on 2 October 2000: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1. As to alternative dispute resolution see generally ARBITRATION.

6 The Pre-action Protocol for Defamation (2000) is intended to encourage exchange of information between parties at an early stage and to provide a clear framework within which parties to a claim in defamation, acting in good faith, can explore the early and appropriate resolution of that claim: para 1.3. The protocol came into force on 2 October 2000: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

7 The Professional Negligence Pre-action Protocol (2001) is designed to apply when a claimant wishes to claim against a professional (other than construction professionals (to whom the Pre-action Protocol for Construction and Engineering Disputes (2000) applies: see note 4) and healthcare providers (to whom the Pre-action Protocol for the Resolution of Clinical Disputes (1999) applies: see note 3)) as a result of that professional's alleged negligence or equivalent breach of contract or breach of fiduciary duty: Professional Negligence Pre-action Protocol (2001) para A1. The protocol's aim is to establish a framework in which there is an early exchange of information so that the claim can be fully investigated and, if possible, resolved without the need for litigation: para A2. The protocol came into force on 16 July 2001: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

8 The Pre-action Protocol for Judicial Review (2002) sets out a code of good practice and contains the steps which parties should generally follow before making a claim for judicial review. In particular, the protocol deals with the information required to be contained in a letter before claim and in a response to such a letter, and contains guidelines as to the levels of public funding which may be provided to assist persons making a claim for judicial review. The protocol came into force on 4 March 2002: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

9 The Pre-action Protocol for Disease and Illness Claims (2003) sets out a code of good practice which parties should follow in all personal injury claims where the injury is not as a result of an accident but takes the form of an illness or disease: see paras 2.1, 4. The protocol covers disease claims which are likely to be complex and frequently not suitable for fast track procedures, even though they may fall within fast track limits. Disease for the purpose of the protocol primarily covers any illness physical or psychological, any disorder, ailment, affliction, complaint, malady, or derangement other than a physical or psychological injury solely caused by an accident or other similar single event: para 2.2. The protocol is not limited to diseases occurring in the workplace but will embrace diseases occurring in other situations for example through occupation of premises or the use of products. It is not intended to cover those cases, which are dealt with as a 'group' or 'class' action: para 2.3. The protocol came into force on 8 December 2003: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

10 The Pre-action Protocol for Housing Disrepair Cases (2003) is intended to apply to civil law claims which include a claim for disrepair: see paras 3.1, 4.2. For the purposes of the protocol, a disrepair claim is a civil claim arising from the condition of residential premises and may include a related personal injury claim. However, it does not include disrepair claims which originate as counterclaims or set-offs in other proceedings: para 3.1(a). The types of claim which it is intended to cover include those brought under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 s 11, the Defective Premises Act 1972 s 4, common law nuisance and negligence, and those brought under the express terms of a tenancy agreement or lease. It does not cover claims brought under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 s 82, which are heard in the magistrates' court: Pre-action Protocol for Housing Disrepair Cases para 3.1(b). The protocol covers claims by any person with a disrepair claim as referred to above, including tenants, lessees and members of the tenant's family: para 3.1(c). The protocol came into force on 8 December 2003: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

11 The Pre-action Protocol for Possession Claims based on Rent Arrears (2006) applies to residential possession claims by social landlords (such as local authorities, registered social landlords and housing action trusts) which are based solely on claims for rent arrears. The protocol does not apply to claims in respect of long leases or to claims for possession where there is no security of tenure. The protocol reflects the guidance on good practice given to social landlords in the collection of rent arrears. It recognises that it is in the interests of both landlords and tenants to ensure that rent is paid promptly and to ensure that difficulties are resolved wherever possible without court proceedings. The protocol came into force on 2 September 2006: see Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1.

12 Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.1. Where a person enters into a funding arrangement within the meaning of CPR 43.2(1)(k) (see PARA 1830) he should inform other potential parties to the claim that he has done so, and this requirement applies to all proceedings whether proceedings to which a pre-action protocol applies or otherwise: Practice Direction--Protocols para 4A.

108. Objectives and effect of pre-action protocols.

While the approved pre-action protocols vary in their detail¹, their intention and effect is to impose a formal structure upon the procedure for the exchange of information about the claim and details of the quantum of the claim being made². The objectives of the protocols are:

- 141 (1) to encourage the exchange of early and full information about the prospective legal claim;
- 142 (2) to enable the parties to avoid litigation by agreeing a settlement of the claim before the commencement of proceedings; and
- 143 (3) to support the efficient management of proceedings where litigation cannot be avoided³.

The information provided by the intended claimant must be sufficient to enable the intended defendant to investigate and evaluate the prospective claim and decide whether to make an offer to settle the claim before proceedings are commenced⁴. Such information includes the disclosure of the identity of any expert witness upon whose evidence and opinion the party intends to rely and the disclosure of documents supporting the party's claim or its quantum. The intended defendant's response must be reasoned and contain sufficient comment and detail to enable the intended claimant to evaluate and respond to any offer made⁵.

The court will expect all parties to have complied in substance with the terms of an approved protocol⁶.

¹ As to the approved pre-action protocols see PARA 107; and as to the meaning of 'pre-action protocol' see PARA 13.

² See eg the Pre-action Protocol for Personal Injury Claims (1999) para 2.6 (early notification); the Pre-action Protocol for Construction and Engineering Disputes (2000) para 2 (general aim).

In Infantino v Maclean [2001] 3 All ER 802, where the claimant's solicitors had not only complied with, but gone beyond the requirements of, the relevant pre-action protocol but had then failed to comply with the time limit for service because of an administrative error, the court made an order dispensing with service under CPR 6.9 (now CPR 6.16: see PARA 153); but this decision has been disapproved in Godwin v Swindon Borough Council [2001] EWCA Civ 1478, [2001] 4 All ER 641, [2001] All ER (D) 135 (Oct).

109. Failure to comply with approved pre-action protocols.

A claimant may be found to have failed to comply¹ with a pre-action protocol by, for example, not having provided sufficient information to the defendant, or not having followed the procedure required by the protocol² to be followed³.

A defendant may be found to have failed to comply with a protocol by, for example:

- 144 (1) not making a preliminary response to the letter of claim within the time fixed for that purpose by the relevant protocol⁴;
- 145 (2) not making a full response within the time fixed for that purpose by the relevant protocol⁵;
- 146 (3) not disclosing documents required to be disclosed by the relevant protocol⁶.

1 The court will take compliance or non-compliance with a relevant protocol into account where the claim was started after the coming into force of that protocol but will not do so where the claim was started before that date: Practice Direction--Protocols para 5.2. Parties in a claim started after a relevant protocol came into force, who have, by work done before that date, achieved the objectives sought to be achieved by certain requirements of that protocol, need not take any further steps to comply with those requirements. They will not be considered to have not complied with the protocol for the purposes of paras 2, 3 (see PARA 108 text and note 6; heads (1)-(3) in the text; and PARA 110): para 5.3. Parties in a claim started after a relevant protocol came into force, who have not been able to comply with any particular requirements of that protocol because the period of time between the publication date and the date of coming into force was too short, will not be considered to have not complied with the protocol for the purposes of paras 2, 3: para 5.4. As to the dates when the approved protocols came into force see PARA 107; and as to the consequences of non-compliance with the protocols see PARA 110.

5 Eg within three months of the letter of claim under Pre-action Protocol for the Resolution of Clinical Disputes (1999) (see para 3.25); within three months from the date of acknowledgment of the letter of claim under the Pre-action Protocol for Personal Injury Claims (1999) (see para 3.7).

Consequences of failure to comply with pre-action protocols practice direction or with the protocols.

110. Consequences of failure to comply with pre-action protocols practice direction or with the protocols.

In order to ensure that parties comply with the requirements of the pre-action protocols practice direction and with the protocols, the Civil Procedure Rules enable the court to take into account compliance or non-compliance¹ with an applicable protocol when giving directions for the management of proceedings² and when making orders for costs³.

Furthermore, if, in the opinion of the court, non-compliance has led to the commencement of proceedings which might otherwise not have needed to be commenced, or has led to costs being incurred in the proceedings that might otherwise not have been incurred, the orders the court may make include:

- 147 (1) an order that the party at fault pay the costs of the proceedings, or part of those costs, of the other party or parties;
- 148 (2) an order that the party at fault pay those costs on an indemnity basis;
- 149 (3) if the party at fault is a claimant in whose favour an order for the payment of damages or some specified sum is subsequently made, an order depriving that party of interest on such sum and in respect of such period as may be specified, and/or awarding interest at a lower rate than that at which interest would otherwise have been awarded;
- 150 (4) if the party at fault is a defendant and an order for the payment of damages or some specified sum is subsequently made in favour of the claimant, an order awarding interest on such sum and in respect of such period as may be specified at a higher rate, not exceeding 10 per cent above base rate, than the rate at which interest would otherwise have been awarded⁴.

The court will exercise its powers under these provisions with the object of placing the innocent party in no worse a position than he would have been in if the protocol had been complied with⁵.

When completing and filing the allocation questionnaire the parties are required to state whether they have complied with any relevant pre-action protocol and, if not, the reason why⁶. Moreover, if a potential party fails or refuses to give disclosure of relevant documents in his control, upon the application of the potential claimant the court has power to order such documents to be disclosed⁷.

1 As to the duty to comply with pre-action protocols see Practice Direction--Protocols para 2.2; and PARA 108. As to non-compliance see PARA 109.

2 See CPR 3.1(4), (5), 3.9(e). In giving directions the court may take into account the extent of non-compliance with pre-action protocols (see CPR 3.1(4); and PARA 247) and may order a party to pay money into court if, without good reason, a protocol has not been complied with (see CPR 3.1(5); and PARA 247). The extent of compliance with a protocol is to be taken into account by the court when deciding whether to grant relief from a sanction: see CPR 3.9(e); and PARA 256.

3 Practice Direction--Protocols para 2.1. As to making orders for costs see CPR 44.3(5)(a). In deciding what order for costs to make, the court must have regard to the conduct of the parties including all pre-action conduct, whether or not a pre-action protocol applies; and in deciding the quantum of costs, the court must have regard to the conduct of all the parties including conduct before as well as during the proceedings and the efforts made, if any, before and during the proceedings in order to try to resolve the dispute: see CPR 44.3(5) (a); and see eg Mars UK Ltd v Teknowledge Ltd [1999] IP & T 26, sub nom Mars UK Ltd v Teknowledge Ltd (No 2) (1999) Times, 8 July. Furthermore, in the case of pre-action or third party disclosure, non-compliance with a pre-action protocol may result in an order for costs being different from the usual order that the party seeking disclosure pay the costs of the disclosing party: see CPR 31.16, 31.17; and PARAS 112, 550.

(2) DISCLOSURE

111. Pre-action disclosure.

Subject to rules of court¹, on the application of any person who appears to the court to be likely to be a party to subsequent proceedings², the court has power to order a person who is likely to be a party to those proceedings and to be likely to have in his possession, custody or power documents which are relevant to an issue arising or likely to arise out of that claim³:

- 151 (1) to disclose whether those documents are in his possession, custody or power⁴; and
- 152 (2) to produce such of those documents as are in his possession, custody or power to the applicant or, on such conditions as may be specified in the order:
- 11
- 18. (a) to the applicant's legal advisers; or
- 19. (b) to the applicant's legal advisers and any medical or other professional adviser of the applicant; or
- 20. (c) if the applicant has no legal adviser, to any medical or other professional adviser of the applicant⁵.
- 12

A court should be hesitant about determining a substantive issue in the anticipated proceedings when hearing an application for pre-action disclosure⁶.

1 See CPR 31.16; and PARA 112.

2 A party who makes or responds to such an application may be seen as submitting to the jurisdiction of the court: see Caltex Trading Pte Ltd v Metro Trading International Inc (Glencore International AG, third parties) (Sea Victory Shipping, fourth parties)[2000] 1 All ER (Comm) 108 (decided under the old rules). 112. Procedure for pre-action disclosure.

An application to the court¹ to exercise the power to order disclosure² before proceedings have started³ must be supported by evidence⁴. The court may make an order under this rule only where:

- 153 (1) the respondent is likely to be a party to subsequent proceedings⁵;
- 154 (2) the applicant is also likely to be a party to those proceedings⁶;
- 155 (3) if proceedings had started, the respondent's duty by way of standard disclosure⁷ would extend to the documents⁸ or classes of documents of which the applicant seeks disclosure⁹; and
- 156 (4) disclosure before proceedings have started is desirable in order to dispose fairly of the anticipated proceedings¹⁰, assist the dispute to be resolved without proceedings¹¹, or save costs¹².

Such an order must specify the documents or the classes of documents which the respondent must disclose¹³ and require him, when making disclosure, to specify any of those documents which are no longer in his control¹⁴ or in respect of which he claims a right or duty to withhold inspection¹⁵. Such an order may also require the respondent to indicate what has happened to any documents which are no longer in his control¹⁶ and specify the time and place for disclosure and inspection¹⁷.

2 As to disclosure generally see PARA 538 et seq.

The application should be made under CPR Pt 23 to the court where the claim to which the application relates will be started unless there is good reason to make the application to a different court (see PARA 303); CPR 23.2(4); Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 5.

Pre-action disclosure is applicable in a vast range of cases and it is peculiarly for judges in their case management role to work out the circumstances in which it will be ordered. The circumstances spelt out by the rule show that it will only be ordered where the court can say that the documents asked for are documents that would have to be produced at the standard disclosure stage. The court therefore has to be clear what the issues in the litigation are likely to be and then form a view as to whether the case is one in which pre-action disclosure is desirable: see Bermuda International Securities Ltd v KPMG (a firm) [2001] EWCA Civ 269, [2001] All ER (D) 337 (Feb), [2001] CPLR 252 (where the Court of Appeal upheld the judge's 'impeccable' exercise of his discretion to order pre-action disclosure); and see also eg Burrells Wharf Freeholds Ltd v Galliard Homes Ltd [1999] 33 EG 82 (pre-action disclosure ordered); cf Nabina v Chief Constable of the Greater Manchester Police Forces [2000] All ER (D) 2217 (application refused). 113. Claim for pre-action disclosure otherwise than under statutory provisions.

Where the court has no power under statute¹ to order pre-action disclosure and production of documents, because the party in whose control the documents are is not likely to be a party to subsequent proceedings, a potential claimant may commence proceedings for an order for disclosure and production by issuing proceedings against a person who has such documents in certain circumstances². Since the person who has control of the documents is not likely to be a party, the claimant has no cause of action against him as a wrongdoer. However, if the defendant to such proceedings can be shown to have become involved in the wrongdoing of others, whether voluntarily or not, albeit innocently, to an extent which has facilitated the wrongdoing of those others, he comes under a duty to assist the victim of the wrongdoing by giving full information, by disclosure of documents or otherwise, which will identify the wrongdoers to the victim³. A victim of a tort may also obtain such information from such a person innocently involved in the wrong, even though the victim cannot show that the third party had committed a tort against the victim without that information⁴.

Inspection, preservation etc of evidence or property before commencement of proceedings.

(3) INSPECTION AND PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE OR PROPERTY

114. Inspection, preservation etc of evidence or property before commencement of proceedings.

On the application of any person in accordance with rules of court, the High Court and a county court have power, in such circumstances as may be specified in the rules¹, to make an order providing for any one or more of the following matters, that is to say:

- 157 (1) the inspection, photographing, preservation, custody and detention of property² which appears to the court to be property which may become the subject-matter of subsequent proceedings in the court, or as to which any question may arise in any such proceedings; and
- 158 (2) the taking of samples of any such property as is mentioned in head (1) above and the carrying out of any experiment on or with any such property³.

The court may not make such an order if it considers that compliance with the order, if made, would be likely to be injurious to the public interest⁴.

2 For these purposes, 'property' includes any land, chattel or other corporeal property of any description: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 35(5) (amended by the Administration of Justice Act 1982 s 6(2)); County Courts Act 1984 s 54(5). (4) OFFERS OF SETTLEMENT

115. Offers to settle before commencement of proceedings.

A party may make an offer to settle in whatever way he chooses¹. If he makes an offer to settle before proceedings are begun which complies with the provisions of the relevant rule², the court will take that offer into account when making any order as to costs³.

The offer must:

- 159 (1) be in writing⁴;
- 160 (2) state on its face that it is intended to have the consequences of Part 36 of the Civil Procedure Rules⁵;
- 161 (3) specify a period of not less than 21 days within which the defendant⁶ will be liable for the claimant's costs⁷ if the offer is accepted⁸;
- 162 (4) state whether it relates to the whole of the claim or to part of it or to an issue that arises in it and if so to which part or issue⁹; and
- 163 (5) state whether it takes into account any counterclaim¹⁰.

If the offeror is a defendant to a money claim:

- 164 (a) a Part 36 offer by the defendant to pay a sum of money in settlement of a claim must be an offer to pay a single sum of money¹¹;
- 165 (b) but an offer that includes an offer to pay all or part of the sum, if accepted, at a date later than 14 days following the date of acceptance will not be treated as a Part 36 offer unless the offeree accepts the offer¹².

The court's permission is required to accept a Part 36 offer in certain circumstances¹³. An offer made under these provisions is made when it is served on the offeree¹⁴.

1 See CPR 36.1(1), (2). If that offer is not made in accordance with CPR 36.2, it will not have the consequences specified in CPR 36.10, 36.11 and 36.14: CPR 36.1(2). An offer made in accordance with CPR Pt 36 is called a 'Part 36 offer': CPR 36.2(1); and see PARA 729. Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/5. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS/(1) IN GENERAL/116. Court where proceedings are to be started.

5. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS

(1) IN GENERAL

116. Court where proceedings are to be started.

Restrictions on where proceedings may be started are set out in the relevant practice direction¹. Subject to the following provisions, proceedings which both the High Court and the county courts have jurisdiction to deal with may be started in the High Court or in a county court², but a claim should be started in the High Court if by reason of:

- 166 (1) the financial value of the claim and the amount in dispute; and/or
- 167 (2) the complexity of the facts, legal issues, remedies or procedures involved; and/or
- 168 (3) the importance of the outcome of the claim to the public in general, the claimant believes that the claim ought to be dealt with by a High Court judge³.

Proceedings (whether for damages or for a specified sum) may not be started in the High Court unless the value of the claim is more than £25,000⁴ and proceedings which include a claim for damages in respect of personal injuries must not be started in the High Court unless the value of the claim is £50,000 or more⁵. A claim must be issued in the High Court or a county court if an enactment so requires⁶.

A claim relating to Chancery business⁷ may, subject to any enactment, rule or practice direction, be dealt with in the High Court or in a county court⁸. A claim relating to certain specified matters⁹ must be dealt with in the High Court¹⁰ as must a claim for damages in respect of a judicial act under the Human Rights Act 1998¹¹.

Particular provision is made by the relevant rules and practice directions with regard to the commencement and conduct of the following specialist proceedings¹²:

- 169 (a) Admiralty proceedings¹³;
- 170 (b) arbitration proceedings¹⁴;
- 171 (c) commercial and mercantile actions¹⁵;
- 172 (d) intellectual property claims, namely matters arising under the Patents Act 1977, the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, the Trade Marks Act 1994, the Olympic Symbol etc Protection Act 1995 and the Olympics Association Rights (Infringement Proceedings) Regulations 1995¹⁶;
- 173 (e) Technology and Construction Court Business¹⁷; and
- 174 (f) proceedings under the Companies Act 1985, the Companies Act 1989 and the Companies Act 2006¹⁸.

A contentious probate claim must be commenced in the relevant office¹⁹ and using the normal procedure²⁰. Claims for the recovery of goods under, and claims relating to agreements regulated by, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 must be issued in the county court for the district in which the debtor resides or carries on business²¹. Landlord and tenant claims²² must normally be started in the county court for the district in which the land is situated²³, as must a claim for the recovery of possession of land (including buildings)²⁴.

The following proceedings may not be started in a county court unless the parties have agreed otherwise in writing:

- 175 (i) a claim for damages or other remedy for libel or slander; and
- 176 (ii) a claim in which the title to any toll, fair, market or franchise is in question²⁵.

Applications for an access order under the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 1992 must be commenced in a county court²⁶.

Cases are allocated to different lists depending on the subject matter of the case. The lists are used for administrative purposes and may also have their own procedures and judges²⁷.

2 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 1.

3 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.4. As to the transfer to the county court of proceedings started in the High Court and vice versa see CPR Pt 30; and PARA 66 et seq.

4 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.1; and see the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 4A (added by SI 1999/1014; and amended by SI 2009/577). For proceedings issued before 6 April 2009, a claim for money in which the county courts have jurisdiction could only be commenced in the High Court if the value of the claim was more than £15,000: see the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 4A (as so added); and the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction (Amendment) Order 2009, SI 2009/577, art 8.

5 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.2; and see the High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 5(1) (art 5(1) substituted by SI 1999/1014; and amended by SI 2009/577). For these purposes, 'personal injuries' means personal injuries to the claimant or any other person, and includes disease, impairment of physical or mental condition, and death: High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 5(2) (amended by SI 1999/1014). The High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 5 does not, however, apply to proceedings which include a claim for damages in respect of an alleged breach of duty of care committed in the course of the provision of clinical or medical services (including dental or nursing services): art 5(3) (added by SI 1999/1014). The value of the claim must be calculated in accordance with CPR 16.3(6): High Court and County Courts Jurisdiction Order 1991, SI 1991/724, art 9 (substituted by SI 1999/1014; and amended by SI 2009/577). When calculating how much he expects to recover, the claimant must disregard any possibility (1) that he may recover interest and/or costs; (2) that the court may make a finding of contributory negligence against him; (3) that the defendant may make a counterclaim or that the defence may include a set-off; or (4) that the defendant may be liable to pay an amount of money which the court awards to the claimant to the Secretary of State for Social Security under the Social Security (Recovery of Benefits) Act 1997 s 6 (see DAMAGES vol 12(1) (Reissue) PARA 915): CPR 16.3(6). As to the meanings of 'claimant' and 'defendant' see PARA 18; and as to the meaning of 'counterclaim' see PARA 618 note 3.

7 For these purposes, 'Chancery business' includes any of the matters specified in the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 61(1), (3), Sch 1 para 1 (see PARA 44): Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.5. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. As to probate claims, however, see the text and notes 19-20; as to intellectual property claims see head (d) in the text; and as to proceedings under the Companies Acts see head (f) in the text.

8 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.5. The claim form must, if issued in the High Court, be marked in the top right hand corner 'Chancery Division' and, if issued in the county court, be marked 'Chancery Business': para 2.5. As to the equity jurisdiction of county courts see the County Courts Act 1984 s 23; and PARA 58 note 9.

9 Is a claim relating to any of the matters specified in the Supreme Court Act 1981 Sch 1 para 2(a), (b): Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.6. The specified matters are applications for writs of habeas corpus, except applications made by a parent or guardian of a minor for such a writ concerning the custody of the minor, and applications for judicial review: see PARA 45 heads (1), (2) in the text. Such a claim will be assigned to the Queen's Bench Division: Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.6. If a claim in the High Court for which a jury trial is directed is not already being dealt with in the Queen's Bench Division it will be transferred there: see para 2.8. As to jury trial in civil proceedings see PARA 1132.

11 CPR 7.11(1); Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.10(2). If the claim is made in a notice of appeal then it will be dealt with according to the normal rules governing where that appeal is heard. Otherwise, the normal rules apply in deciding in which court and specialist list a claim that includes issues under the Human Rights Act 1998 should be started, and in deciding which procedure (ie CPR Pt 7, CPR Pt 8, or CPR Pt 54: see PARAS 117 et seq, 1530) to use to start the claim: see CPR 7.11(2); Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.10(1). Note that a county court cannot make a declaration of incompatibility in accordance with the Human Rights Act 1998 s 4: see s 4(5). As to the meaning of 'specialist list' see PARA 67 note 8. As to specialist lists see PARA 1536 et seq. As to lists generally see the text and note 27.

12 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.7. As to specialist proceedings see PARA 1536 et seq.

16 See CPR Pt 63; and Practice Direction--Patents and other Intellectual Property Claims PD 63. As to proceedings under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 and the Trade Marks Act 1994 see COPYRIGHT, DESIGN RIGHT AND RELATED RIGHTS; TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES; and as to proceedings under the Olympic Symbol etc Protection Act 1995 and the Olympics Association Rights (Infringement Proceedings) Regulations 1995, SI 1995/3325, see TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES vol 48 (2007 Reissue) PARA 492 et seq. Patents cases should be transferred from the High Court to the county court or vice versa where it is in the interests of efficiency and expediency to do so: see CIBA Vision (UK) Ltd v Coopervision Ltd [2001] All ER (D) 20 (Jul), sub nom Wesley Jessen Corpn v Coopervision Ltd (2001) Times, 31 July, per Neuberger J.

17 See CPR Pt 60; and Practice Direction--Technology and Construction Court Claims PD 60. A Technology and Construction Court ('TCC') claim is a claim which involves issues or questions which are technically complex or for which a trial by a judge of the TCC is desirable and which has been issued in or transferred into the specialist list for such claims: CPR 60.1(2)(a), (3). See further PARA 1546.

18 See CPR 49; Practice Direction--Applications under the Companies Acts and Related Legislation PD 49.

19 'Relevant office' means (1) in the case of High Court proceedings in a Chancery district registry, that registry; (2) in the case of any other High Court proceedings, Chancery Chambers at the Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London, WC2A 2LL; and (3) in the case of county court proceedings, the office of the county court in question: CPR 57.1(2)(b).

20 CPR 57.3. CPR 57 came into force on 15 October 2001. The 'normal procedure' referred to is the procedure under CPR Pt 7: see PARA 117 et seq.

21 See Practice Direction--Consumer Credit Act Claim PD 7B para 4.1. In any other claim to recover goods, the claim may only be started in the court for the district: (1) in which the defendant, or one of the defendants, resides or carries on business; or (2) in which the goods are situated: para 4.2. A claim of a debtor or hirer for an order under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 129(1)(b) or (ba) (a time order: see CONSUMER CREDIT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 292) may only be started in the court where the claimant resides or carries on business: Practice Direction--Consumer Credit Act Claim PD 7B para 4.3. The claimant may recover fixed costs in certain circumstances where such a claim is made: see CPR 45.1(2)(b). As to costs generally see also PARA 1729 et seq.

22 'Landlord and tenant claim' means a claim under (1) the Landlord and Tenant Act 1927; (2) the Leasehold Property (Repairs) Act 1938; (3) the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954; (4) the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985; (5) the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987; or (6) the Housing Act 2004 s 214: CPR 56.1(1). See further LANDLORD AND TENANT vol 27(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 57.

23 See CPR 56.2(1). Unless an enactment provides otherwise, the claim may be started in the High Court if the claimant files with the claim form a certificate stating the reasons for bringing the claim in that court verified by a statement of truth in accordance with CPR 22.1(1) (see PARA 613): CPR 56.2(2). The practice direction refers to circumstances which may justify starting the claim in the High Court: CPR 56.2(3).

Circumstances which may, in an appropriate case, justify starting a claim in the High Court are if there are complicated disputes of fact or there are points of law of general importance: Practice Direction--Landlord and Tenant Claims and Miscellaneous Provisions about Land PD 56 para 2.4. The value of the property and the amount of any financial claim may be relevant circumstances, but these factors alone will not normally justify starting the claim in the High Court: para 2.5.

24 See CPR 55.1(a), 55.3; Practice Direction--Possession Claims PD 55 para 1.1. Circumstances which may, in an appropriate case, justify starting a claim in the High Court are if there are complicated disputes of fact; there are points of law of general importance; or the claim is against trespassers and there is a substantial risk of public disturbance or of serious harm to persons or property which properly require immediate determination: para 1.3. The value of the property and the amount of any financial claim may be relevant circumstances, but these factors alone will not normally justify starting the claim in the High Court: para 1.4. High Court claims for the possession of land subject to a mortgage will be assigned to the Chancery Division: para 1.6. The claimant must use the appropriate claim form and particulars of claim form: para 1.5. A claim which is not a possession claim may be brought under the procedure set out in CPR 55 Section I if it is started in the same claim form as a possession claim which, by virtue of CPR 55.2(1) must be brought in accordance with that Section: Practice Direction--Possession Claims PD 55 para 1.7.

25 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 2.9; and see the County Courts Act 1984 s 15 (amended by SI 1991/724). The parties to any claim, other than a claim which if commenced in the High Court would have been assigned to the Chancery Division, or proceedings which would have been assigned to the Family Division or have involved the exercise of the High Court's Admiralty jurisdiction, may agree, by a memorandum signed by them or by their respective legal representatives, to confer jurisdiction on the county court: see the County Courts Act 1984 s 18 (amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 125(3), Sch 18 para 49(3)).

27 See CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31.

TEXT AND NOTES--Applications under European Parliament and EC Council Regulation 861/2007 establishing a European small claims procedure (see PARAS 1651-1656) must be commenced in a county court: SI 1991/724 art 6B (added by SI 2008/2934).

NOTES--Certain functions under provisions mentioned in this paragraph are 'relevant functions' for the purposes of the Regulatory Enforcement and Sanctions Act 2008 s 4, Sch 3, see LOCAL GOVERNMENT vol 69 (2009) PARA 733.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/5. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS/(1) IN GENERAL/117. Methods of starting proceedings.

117. Methods of starting proceedings.

There are two methods of starting proceedings:

- 177 (1) the normal method, using the procedure under Part 7 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ and a claim form prescribed under the practice direction to Part 7²;
- 178 (2) the alternative method, using the procedure under Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules³ and a claim form prescribed under the practice directions to Parts 7 and 8⁴.

Where a remedy is sought before the issue of proceedings⁵, then an application must be made to the court where the proceedings are likely to be started, unless there is good reason to make it to a different court, under Part 23 of the Civil Procedure Rules⁶.

A practice direction may make provision for a claimant to start a claim by requesting the issue of a claim form electronically⁷.

1 See CPR 7.2; and PARA 118.

2 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 3.1. As to the contents of the claim form see CPR 16.2, 16.3; and PARAS 585-586. Where the normal procedure is used, the claim form is part of the statement of case (see PARA 584 et seq) and is considered further in that context.

3 See CPR 8.1; and PARA 127.

4 Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 3.1; Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 para 4.2. As to the contents of the claim form see CPR 8.2; and PARA 128. If the claimant wishes his claim to proceed under CPR Pt 8, or if the claim is required to proceed under Pt 8, the claim form must so state. Otherwise the claim will proceed under CPR Pt 7: see Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 3.3. Where the claim proceeds under Pt 8, the rules relating to statements of case (ie CPR Pt 16) do not apply: see CPR 16.1.

As to the endorsement of the claim form and any separate particulars of claim where the claim is to be served out of the jurisdiction and is one which the court has power to deal with under the judgments regulation (as defined: see PARA 169) see Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 3.5A.

5 Eg for pre-action disclosure under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 33 and CPR 31.16: see PARAS 111-112. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

6 CPR 23.2(4); Practice Direction--Applications PD 23AA para 5. Further, an application for a remedy in relation to proceedings which are taking place, or will take place, in another jurisdiction must also be made under CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq): see CPR 7.2(2) note. 'Jurisdiction' means, unless the context requires otherwise, England and Wales and any part of the territorial waters of the United Kingdom adjoining England and Wales: CPR 2.3(1). As to service of foreign proceedings see PARA 181; and as to the appropriate forum for civil proceedings see PARAS 535-536; and see generally CONFLICT OF LAWS.

7 CPR 7.12(1). The practice direction may, in particular (1) specify the types of claim which may be issued electronically and the conditions which a claim must meet before it may be issued electronically; (2) specify the court where the claim will be issued and the circumstances in which the claim will be transferred to another court; (3) provide for the filing of other documents electronically where a claim has been started electronically; (4) specify the requirements that must be fulfilled for any document filed electronically; and (5) provide how a fee payable on the filing of any document is to be paid where that document is filed electronically: CPR 7.12(2). The practice direction may disapply or modify the CPR as appropriate in relation to claims started electronically: CPR 7.12(3). See Practice Direction--Money Claim Online PD 7E.

118. Time when proceedings are started.

Proceedings are started when the court¹ issues a claim form at the request of the claimant². A claim form is issued on the date entered on the form by the court³. However, where the claim form as issued is received in the court office on a date earlier than the date at which it was issued by the court, then, for the purposes of any relevant statutory limitation period⁴, the claim is brought on the date when the claim form is received at the court⁵, which will be recorded by the court⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 7.2(1). As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

3 CPR 7.2(2).

4 Eg under the Limitation Act 1980: see generally LIMITATION PERIODS.

5 See Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 5.1.

6 See Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 5.2. The date on which the claim form was received by the court will be recorded by a date stamp either on the claim form held on the court file or on the letter that accompanied the claim form when it was received by the court: para 5.2. An inquiry as to the date on which the claim form was received by the court should be directed to a court officer: para 5.3. Parties proposing to start a claim which is approaching the expiry of the limitation period should recognise the potential importance of establishing the date the claim form was received by the court and should themselves make arrangements to record the date: para 5.4. As to the meaning of 'court officer' see PARA 49 note 3. See Barnes v St Helens Metropolitan Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 1372, [2007] 3 All ER 525, [2006] All ER (D) 303 (Oct) (claim commenced when court received claim form).

120. Requirements for service of a claim form.

Where the claim form is served¹ within the jurisdiction², the claimant must complete the required step³ in relation to the particular method of service chosen, before 12.00 midnight on the calendar day four months after the date of issue of the claim form⁴. The required steps are:

- 179 (1) where the method of service is first class post, document exchange or other service which provides for delivery on the next business day, posting, leaving with, delivering to or collection by the relevant service provider;
- 180 (2) where the method of service is delivery of the document to or leaving it at the relevant place, delivering to or leaving the document at the relevant place;
- 181 (3) where the method of service is personal service⁵, completing the relevant step⁶;
- 182 (4) where the method of service is fax, completing the transmission of the fax;
- 183 (5) where the method of service is another electronic method, sending the e-mail or other electronic transmission⁷.

Where the claim form is to be served out of the jurisdiction, the claim form must be served⁸ within six months of the date of issue⁹.

With regard to certain alternative procedure claims¹⁰, the claim form must be served not less than 21 days before the hearing date¹¹.

It remains the case that proceedings are not 'definitively pending' for the purposes of the Convention on Jurisdiction and Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters 1968 art 21, and an English court is not seised of a matter, until the service of the claim form on the defendant; it is not the case that, on issue of a claim form, a claimant has effectively 'crossed the Rubicon': SDL International Ltd v Centre De Co-operation International [2000] All ER (D) 1041.

8 I.e. in accordance with CPR Pt 6 Section IV: see PARA 168 et seq.

9 CPR 7.5(2). Once a claim form specifies an address within the jurisdiction, the court is not thereby precluded from giving permission to serve out of the jurisdiction after the four month period. If, however, the effect of permission for service out of the jurisdiction would be to revive a claim form after the four month period, that would be an important consideration in deciding whether or not permission to serve out of the jurisdiction should be given: National Bank of Greece SA v RM Outhwaite 317 Syndicate at Lloyds [2001] Lloyd's Rep IR 652. A claim form addressed to a claimant resident abroad is potentially valid for six months under CPR 7.5(2) even if it is marked 'Not for service out of the jurisdiction': ST Shipping & Transport Inc v Vyzantio Shipping Ltd, The Byzantio [2004] EWHC 3339 (Comm), [2005] 1 Lloyd's Rep 531. 121. Extension of time for serving a claim form.

The claimant¹ may apply for an order extending the period for compliance with the requirements as to the time within which the claim form must be served². The general rule is that an application to extend the time for compliance must be made within the period specified for service by the Civil Procedure Rules³ or, where an order has been made extending that time, within the period for service specified by that order⁴. If the claimant applies for an order to extend the time for compliance after the end of the period specified by the Civil Procedure Rules or by an order extending that time, the court⁵ may make such an order only if the court has failed to serve the claim form⁶, or the claimant has taken all reasonable steps to comply with the rule but has been unable to do so⁷ and, in either case, the claimant has acted promptly in making the application⁸. An application for an order extending the time for compliance with the time limits for service must be supported by evidence⁹ and may be made without notice¹⁰.

122. Application by defendant for service of claim form.

Where a claim form has been issued against a defendant¹, but has not yet been served² on him, the defendant may serve a notice on the claimant³ requiring him to serve the claim form or discontinue the claim within a period specified in the notice⁴. If the claimant fails to comply with the notice, the court⁵ may, on the application of the defendant, dismiss the claim⁶ or make any other order it thinks just⁷.

2 As to the requirement of service see PARA 120; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

3 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

4 CPR 7.7(1). The period so specified must be at least 14 days after service of the notice: CPR 7.7(2). As to time limits see PARA 88 et seq.

In any event, they must be served on the defendant no later than the latest time for serving a claim form⁶. Where the claimant serves particulars of claim separately from the claim form⁷, the claimant must generally, within seven days of service on the defendant, file⁸ a copy of the particulars⁹.

The court has discretion to extend time for the service of particulars of claim¹⁰.

As to the requirement for service of the claim form see PARA 120; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2. CPR Pt 16 (statements of case) does not apply where the procedure under Pt 8 is followed, so particulars of claim are not required: see CPR 8.9(a)(i). Provision is made in CPR Pt 8 for the matters which must be stated in the claim form: see PARA 128.

- 186 (3) may disapply or modify the Civil Procedure Rules as appropriate in relation to the claims referred to in heads (1) and (2) above⁴.

Practice directions have been made making special provisions for fixed date hearings where certain types of claim are made under the Consumer Credit Act 1974⁵ and where claims are made for the recovery of taxes⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 7.9(a).

3 CPR 7.9(b).

4 CPR 7.9(c). CPR 7.9 has no application in the Commercial Court: see PARA 1537 note 4.

5 See Practice Direction--Consumer Credit Act Claim PD 7B paras 3.1, 5.1. The particulars of claim must be served with the claim form: para 5.2. Each party must be given at least 28 days' notice of the hearing date: para 5.6. Where the claimant serves the claim form, he must serve notice of the hearing date at the same time, unless the hearing date is specified in the claim form: para 5.7. As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18. As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq.

6 See Practice Direction--Claims for the Recovery of Taxes PD 7D paras 1.1, 2.1. If a defence is filed, the court will fix a date for the hearing, and may dispose of the claim on that date: paras 2.1, 3.1.

126. Production centre for claims.

There is a production centre for the issue of claim forms and other related matters¹. The relevant practice direction² makes provision for:

- 187 (1) which claimants may use the production centre³;
- 188 (2) the type of claims which the production centre may issue⁴;
- 189 (3) the functions which are to be discharged by the production centre⁵;
- 190 (4) the place where the production centre is to be located⁶; and
- 191 (5) other related matters⁷.

The relevant practice direction may disapply or modify the Civil Procedure Rules as appropriate in relation to claims issued by the production centre⁸.

1 CPR 7.10(1). There is no production centre for the issue of claim forms for the Commercial Court: see PARA 1537 the text and note 2.

2 See Practice Direction--Production Centre PD 7C; and the text and notes 3-8.

3 CPR 7.10(2)(a). Only a centre user may issue or conduct claims through the centre: Practice Direction--Production Centre PD 7C para 3.1. 'Centre user' means a person who is for the time being permitted to issue claims through the centre, and includes a solicitor acting for such a person: para 1.1. The officer may permit any person to be a centre user and may withdraw the permission for any person to be a centre user: paras 3.2, 3.3. A centre user must comply with the provisions of the Code of Practice in his dealings with the centre, and will be allotted a national creditor code: see paras 3.4, 3.5. 'Officer' means the officer in charge of the centre or another officer of the centre acting on his behalf; 'national creditor code' means the number or reference allotted to a centre user by the officer; and 'Code of Practice' means any code of practice which may at any time be issued by the Court Service relating to the discharge by the centre of its functions and the way in which a centre user is to conduct business with the centre: para 1.1.

4 CPR 7.10(2)(b). The centre will not issue any claim form which is to be issued in the High Court: Practice Direction--Production Centre PD 7C para 2.1. The centre will only issue a claim form if the claim is for a specified sum of money less than £100,000; and will not issue any of the following types of claim: (1) a claim against more than two defendants; (2) a claim against two defendants where a different sum is claimed against each of them; (3) a claim where particulars of claim separate from the claim form are required; (4) a claim against the Crown; (5) a claim for an amount in a foreign currency; (6) a claim where either party is known to be a child or protected party within CPR Pt 21 (see PARA 222); (7) a claim where the claimant is a legally assisted person within the meaning of the Legal Aid Act 1988 (repealed: see now the access to Justice Act 1999); (8) a claim where the defendant's address for service as it appears on the claim form is not in England or Wales or Scotland; (9) a claim which is to be issued under CPR Pt 8 (see PARA 127 et seq): Practice Direction--Production Centre PD 7C paras 2.2, 2.3.

5 CPR 7.10(2)(c). The functions of the centre include the provision of a facility which, through the use of information technology, enables a centre user to have claim forms issued and served, whether or not those claim forms are to be treated as issued in the Northampton County Court or in another county court: see Practice Direction--Production Centre PD 7C para 1.3(1).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/5. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS/(2) ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE FOR CLAIMS/127. Types of claim in which alternative procedure under Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules may be followed.

(2) ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE FOR CLAIMS

127. Types of claim in which alternative procedure under Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules may be followed.

A claimant¹ may use the Part 8 procedure² where he seeks the court's³ decision on a question which is unlikely to involve a substantial dispute of fact⁴ or where a rule or practice direction, in relation to a specified type of proceedings, requires or permits the use of the Part 8 procedure⁵. Such a rule or practice direction may disapply or modify any of the rules set out in Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules as they apply to proceedings specified in such rule or practice direction⁶. The court may at any stage order the claim to continue as if the claimant had not used the Part 8 procedure and, if it does so, the court may give any directions it considers appropriate⁷. Where the claimant uses the Part 8 procedure he may not obtain⁸ default judgment⁹.

The rules and directions applicable to all claims¹⁰ apply to claims under the Part 8 procedure where appropriate¹¹.

A modified form of Part 8 procedure must be used for claims for judicial review¹².

Practitioners should be aware of the different regime concerning appeals which applies where the Part 8 procedure is used¹³.

1 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

2 The 'Part 8 procedure' is the procedure set out in CPR Pt 8 (see the text and notes 3-10; and PARA 128 et seq): CPR 8.1(1).

3 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

4 CPR 8.1(2)(a).

5 CPR 8.1(2)(b), (6)(a); Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 para 2.1. The types of claim for which the Part 8 procedure may be used include (1) a claim by or against a child or protected party which has been settled before the commencement of proceedings and where the sole purpose of the claim is to obtain the approval of the court to the settlement; (2) a claim for provisional damages which has been settled before the commencement of proceedings and where the sole purpose of the claim is to obtain a consent judgment: Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 para 3.1. CPR 8.1(2) does not apply if a practice direction provides that the Part 8 procedure may not be used in relation to the type of claim in question: CPR 8.1(4).

The Part 8 procedure must be used for any claim or application in relation to which an Act, rule or practice direction provides that the claim or application is brought by originating summons, originating motion or originating application: Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 para 3.3. Landlord and tenant claims must use the Part 8 procedure: see Practice Direction--Landlord and Tenant Claims and Miscellaneous Provisions about Land PD 56 para 2.1. Other types of claims for which that procedure is required are set out in Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 Section B, Table: see paras 3.2(1), 9.1. Special provisions apply to specified types of claim: see paras 3.2(2), 9.2, Section C. As to the meaning of 'child' see PARA 222 note 3; as to the meaning of 'protected party' see PARA 222 note 1; and as to the meaning of 'landlord and tenant claim' see PARA 116 note 22.

6 CPR 8.1(6)(b). CPR 8.9 provides for other modifications to the general rules where the Part 8 procedure is being used: see PARA 136.

7 CPR 8.1(3); Practice Direction--Alternative Procedure for Claims PD 8 para 3.5. Where it appears to a court officer that a claimant is using the Part 8 procedure inappropriately, he may refer the claim to a judge for the judge to consider the point: para 3.4. 128. Contents of the claim form.

Where the claimant¹ uses the Part 8 procedure², the rules about statements of case do not apply³ and the claim form itself must contain all the necessary details of the claim⁴. The claim form must state:

129. Issue of claim form without naming defendants.

A practice direction may set out the circumstances in which the court¹ may give permission for a claim form to be issued under the Part 8 procedure² without naming a defendant³ and may set out those cases in which an application for permission must be made by application notice before the claim form is issued⁴. The application notice for permission need not be served⁵ on any other person⁶ and must be accompanied by a copy of the claim form that the applicant proposes to issue⁷. 130. Acknowledgment of service.

The defendant¹ must file² an acknowledgment of service in the relevant practice form³ not more than 14 days after service⁴ of the claim form⁵ and serve the acknowledgment of service on the claimant⁶ and any other party⁷. The acknowledgment of service must state whether the defendant contests the claim⁸, and, if the defendant seeks a different remedy from that set out in the claim form, what that remedy is⁹.

132. Filing and serving written evidence.

The claimant¹ must file² any written evidence on which he intends to rely when he files his Part 8 claim form³ unless the evidence is contained in the claim form itself⁴. He may rely on the matters set out in his claim form as evidence if the claim form is verified by a statement of truth⁵. The claimant's evidence must be served⁶ on the defendant⁷ with the claim form⁸.

A defendant who wishes to rely on written evidence must file it when he files his acknowledgment of service⁹. If he does so, he must also, at the same time, serve a copy of his evidence on the other parties¹⁰.

The claimant may, within 14 days of service of the defendant's evidence on him, file further written evidence in reply¹¹. If he does so, he must also, within the same time limit, serve a copy of his evidence on the other parties¹².

A party may apply to the court for an extension of time to serve and file evidence under these provisions¹³. Furthermore, the parties may agree in writing on an extension of time for serving and filing evidence by the defendant¹⁴ or for the claimant to file and serve further evidence¹⁵ in reply¹⁶.

136. Modifications to the general rules where Part 8 procedure is followed.

Where the Part 8 procedure¹ is followed, particular provision is made² for the matters which must be stated in the claim form and the defendant³ is not required to file⁴ a defence and therefore the provisions relating to statements of case⁵ and defence and reply⁶ do not apply⁷. Nor does the requirement to serve on the defendant a form for defending the claim⁸ apply⁹. Furthermore, any time limit in the Civil Procedure Rules which prevents the parties from taking a step before a defence is filed does not apply¹⁰.

Where the Part 8 procedure is followed, the claimant¹¹ may not obtain judgment by request on an admission and therefore the rules relating to admission of whole or part of the claim for a specified amount of money¹² and the rules relating to admission of liability to pay a claim for an unspecified amount of money¹³ do not apply¹⁴.

137. Managing the claim.

The court¹ may give directions immediately a Part 8 claim form² is issued either on the application of a party or on its own initiative³. The directions may include fixing a hearing date where:

- 197 (1) there is no dispute, such as in child⁴ and protected party⁵ settlements; or
- 198 (2) where there may be a dispute, such as in claims for mortgage possession or appointment of trustees, but a hearing date could conveniently be given⁶.

Where the court does not fix a hearing date when the claim form is issued, it will give directions for the disposal of the claim as soon as practicable after the defendant⁷ has acknowledged service of the claim form or, as the case may be, after the period for acknowledging service has expired⁸.

Certain applications, such as a consent application under specified provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954⁹, may not require a hearing¹⁰.

(1) SERVICE GENERALLY

138. Rules about service apply generally.

The rules in Part 6 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ apply to the service² of documents, except where another Part of those Rules, any other enactment, or a practice direction makes a different provision³ or the court⁴ orders otherwise⁵. Different sections of Part 6 apply to service of the claim form⁶ and other documents⁷ in the jurisdiction⁸, to service of the claim form and other documents out of the jurisdiction⁹, and to service of documents from foreign courts or tribunals¹⁰.

1 Ie CPR Pt 6 (see PARA 139 et seq): see CPR 6.1. Part 6 has been entirely replaced with effect from 1 October 2008 by the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Rules 2008, SI 2008/2178.

2 'Service' means the steps required by rules of court to bring documents used in court proceedings to a person's attention: CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31.

3 CPR 6.1(a). Other enactments making different provision include the Companies Act 1985 ss 694A, 695, 725, relating to the service of documents at the registered offices of companies or, in respect of overseas companies, at notified addresses, and the Companies Act 2006 ss 1056, 1139, 1140: see COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 671 et seq, COMPANIES vol 15 (2009) PARAS 1826, 1836. Other rules which deal with service include the following: (1) CPR 54.7 relating to service of the claim form in judicial review proceedings; (2) CPR 55.6 (service on trespassers in possession proceedings) and CPR 55.10 (service of possession claims relating to mortgaged residential property). As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8. As to the meanings of 'claimant' and 'defendant' generally see PARA 18. Any reference in CPR Pt 6 Section I to a defendant or a party to be served includes the person to be served with the claim form on behalf of a child or protected party under CPR 6.13(1) or (2) (see PARA 148): CPR 6.13(3).

(2) SERVICE OF CLAIM FORM AND OTHER DOCUMENTS WITHIN THE JURISDICTION

139. Methods of service of a claim form or other document.

A claim form¹ or other document may be served² by any of the following methods:

- 199 (1) personal service³;
- 200 (2) first class post, document exchange or other service which provides for delivery on the next business day, in accordance with the relevant practice direction⁴;
- 201 (3) leaving the document at a specified place⁵;
- 202 (4) by fax or other means of electronic communication⁶ in accordance with the relevant practice direction⁷; or
- 203 (5) by any method authorised⁸ by the court⁹.

A company may be served by any method permitted under Part 6 of the Civil Procedure Rules or by any of the methods of service set out in the Companies Act 1985 or the Companies Act 2006¹⁰, and a limited liability partnership may be served by any method permitted under Part 6 of the Civil Procedure Rules or by any of the methods of service on a British company set out¹¹ in the Companies Act 1985¹².

2 As to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2. As to the requirements for service of a claim form see further PARA 120; and as to the extension of time for serving a claim form see PARA 121.

3 In accordance with CPR 6.5 (claim form) or 6.22 (other documents) (see PARA 142); see CPR 6.3(1)(a), 6.20(1)(a).

4 CPR 6.3(1)(b), 6.20(1)(b). Service by document exchange (DX) may take place only where (1) the address at which the party is to be served includes a numbered box at a DX; or (2) the writing paper of the party who is to be served or of the solicitor acting for that party sets out the DX box number; and (3) the party or the solicitor acting for that party has not indicated in writing that they are unwilling to accept service by DX: Practice Direction--Service PD 6A para 2.1. Service by post, DX or other service which provides for delivery on the next business day is effected by (a) placing the document in a post box; (b) leaving the document with or delivering the document to the relevant service provider; or (c) having the document collected by the relevant service provider: para 3.1.

5 In a place specified in CPR 6.7, 6.8, 6.9 or 6.10 (claim form) (see PARA 143) or 6.23 (other documents) (see PARA 144): see CPR 6.3(1)(c), 6.20(1)(c).

6 Where a document is to be served by fax or other electronic means, the party who is to be served or the solicitor acting for that party must previously have indicated in writing to the party serving (1) that the party to be served or the solicitor is willing to accept service by fax or other electronic means; and (2) the fax number, e-mail address or other electronic identification to which it must be sent: Practice Direction--Service PD 6A para 4.1(1). The following are to be taken as sufficient written indications for these purposes: (a) a fax number set out on the writing paper of the solicitor acting for the party to be served; (b) an e-mail address set out on the writing paper of the solicitor acting for the party to be served but only where it is stated that the e-mail address may be used for service; or (c) a fax number, e-mail address or electronic identification set out on a statement of case or a response to a claim filed with the court: para 4.1(2). Where a party intends to serve a document by electronic means (other than by fax) that party must first ask the party who is to be served whether there are any limitations to the recipient's agreement to accept service by such means (for example, the format in which documents are to be sent and the maximum size of attachments that may be received): para 4.2. 'Solicitor' includes other authorised litigators within the meaning of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990: CPR 6.2(d).

7 CPR 6.3(1)(d), 6.20(1)(d). Where a document is served by electronic means, the party serving the document need not in addition send or deliver a hard copy: Practice Direction--Service PD 6A para 4.3.

8 le under CPR 6.15 (claim form) or 6.27 (other documents): see PARA 152.

9 CPR 6.3(1)(e), 6.20(1)(e).

10 See CPR 6.3(2), 6.20(2); and PARA 152. As to the methods of service permitted by the Companies Acts 1985 and 2006 see PARA 138 note 3. It appears that following the introduction of what is now CPR 6.3(2) and CPR 6.9 (see PARA 143), the position has now reverted to what it was before the Companies Act 1985 s 694A(2) was enacted, namely that process can be served on a foreign company with a place of business in London without the necessity for establishing any link between the process and the business being carried on in London: Saab v Saudi American Bank [1999] 4 All ER 321, [1999] 1 WLR 1861, CA. On its true construction, the Companies Act 1985 s 694A is permissive, not mandatory, and does not prevent some other statutory provision, whether original or subordinate legislation, from making other provision for service on overseas companies with a branch in Great Britain. Nor is there any statutory provision which provides that an overseas company with a branch in Great Britain can only be sued in respect of the carrying on of the business of that branch. It follows that the relevant provisions of CPR Pt 6 are not ultra vires: Sea Assets Ltd v PT Garuda Indonesia [2000] 4 All ER 371.

142. Personal service.

Where required by another Part of the Civil Procedure Rules, any other enactment, a practice direction or a court order, a claim form¹ must be served² personally³. In other cases, a claim form may be served personally except:

- 207 (1) where (a) the defendant⁴ has given in writing the business address within the jurisdiction⁵ of a solicitor⁶ as an address at which the defendant may be served with the claim form; or (b) a solicitor acting for the defendant has notified the claimant⁷ in writing that the solicitor is instructed by the defendant to accept service of the claim form on behalf of the defendant at a business address within the jurisdiction, when the claim form must be served at the business address of that solicitor⁸; or
- 208 (2) in any proceedings against the Crown⁹.

A claim form is served personally on an individual by leaving it with that individual¹⁰ and is served personally on a company or other corporation by leaving it with a person holding a senior position within the company or corporation¹¹. A document is served personally on a partnership (where partners are being sued in the name of their firm) by leaving it with a partner or a person who, at the time of service, has the control or management of the partnership business at its principal place of business¹².

Where required by another Part of the Civil Procedure Rules, any other enactment, a practice direction or a court order, a document other than a claim form must be served personally¹³. In other cases, a document may be served personally except:

- 210 (ii) in any proceedings by or against the Crown¹⁵.

A document may be served personally as if the document were a claim form in accordance with the above provisions¹⁶.

NOTE 8--CPR 6.7 substituted: SI 2009/3390.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/6. SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) SERVICE OF CLAIM FORM AND OTHER DOCUMENTS WITHIN THE JURISDICTION/143. Address for service of claim form.

143. Address for service of claim form.

The claim form¹ must be served² within the jurisdiction³ except where there is a contractually agreed method for serving the claim form⁴ or as provided by the rules⁵ relating to service out of the jurisdiction⁶. The claimant⁷ must include in the claim form an address at which the defendant⁸ may be served, which must include a full postcode, unless the court orders otherwise⁹. Generally, the defendant may be served with the claim form at an address within the jurisdiction which the defendant has given for the purpose of being served with the proceedings¹⁰. In any claim by a tenant against a landlord, however, the claim form may be served at an address given by the landlord¹¹.

Where the requirements for personal service and as to service on a solicitor do not apply, the defendant does not give an address at which the defendant may be served and the claimant does not wish to effect personal service¹², the claim form must be served on the defendant at a particular place according to the nature of the defendant being served¹³.

Where a claimant has reason to believe that the address of a defendant who is an individual, an individual being sued in the name of a business or an individual being sued in the business name of a partnership is an address at which the defendant no longer resides or carries on business, the claimant must take reasonable steps to ascertain the address of the defendant's current residence or place of business¹⁴. Where, having taken the required reasonable steps, the claimant ascertains the defendant's current address, the claim form must be served at that address; or if the claimant is unable to ascertain the defendant's current address, the claimant must consider whether there is an alternative place where, or an alternative method by which, service may be effected¹⁵. If there is such a place where, or a method by which, service may be effected, the claimant must make an application¹⁶ for service of the claim form by an alternative method or at an alternative place¹⁷. Where the claimant (1) cannot ascertain the defendant's current residence or place of business; and (2) cannot ascertain an alternative place or an alternative method, the claimant may serve on the defendant's usual or last known address¹⁸.

144. Address for service of other documents.

A party to proceedings must give an address at which that party may be served with documents relating to those proceedings¹. The address must include a full postcode unless the court orders otherwise². A party's address for service must be (1) the business address within the United Kingdom of a solicitor³ acting for the party to be served⁴; or (2) where there is no solicitor acting for the party to be served, an address within the United Kingdom at which the party resides or carries on business⁵. Where there is no solicitor acting for the party to be served and the party does not have an address within the United Kingdom at which that party resides or carries on business, the party must give an address for service within the United Kingdom⁶.

Any document to be served in proceedings must be sent or transmitted to, or left at, the party's address for service as above unless it is to be served personally or the court orders otherwise⁷. Where a party indicates or is deemed to have indicated that they will accept service by fax⁸, the fax number given by that party must be at the address for service⁹. Where a party indicates¹⁰ that they will accept service by electronic means other than fax, the e-mail address or electronic identification given by that party will be deemed to be at the address for service¹¹.

These provisions do not apply where an order made by the court¹² specifies where a document may be served¹³.

Where the address for service of a party changes, that party must give notice in writing of the change as soon as it has taken place to the court and every other party¹⁴.

145. Service on the Crown.

In proceedings against the Crown, service of the claim form¹ on the Attorney General must be effected on the Treasury Solicitor and service on a government department must be effected on the solicitor acting for that department². In proceedings by or against the Crown, service of any document in the proceedings on the Crown must be effected in the same manner as if the document were a claim form³.

146. Service of the claim form by contractually agreed method.

Where a contract contains a term providing that, in the event of a claim¹ being started in relation to the contract, the claim form² may be served³ by a method or at a place specified in the contract, and a claim solely in respect of that contract is started, the claim form may be served on the defendant⁴ by the method or at the place specified in the contract⁵. Where in accordance with the contract the claim form is to be served out of the jurisdiction⁶, it may be served if permission to serve it out of the jurisdiction has been granted⁷ or without permission⁸.

147. Service of the claim form relating to a contract on an agent.

The court¹ may, on application, permit a claim form² relating to a contract to be served³ on the defendant's agent where:

- 211 (1) the defendant⁴ is out of the jurisdiction⁵;
- 212 (2) the contract to which the claim⁶ relates was entered into within the jurisdiction with or through the defendant's agent; and
- 213 (3) at the time of the application either the agent's authority has not been terminated or the agent is still in business relations with the defendant⁷.

Such an application must be supported by evidence setting out (a) details of the contract and that it was entered into within the jurisdiction or through an agent who is within the jurisdiction; (b) that the principal for whom the agent is acting was, at the time the contract was entered into and is at the time of the application, out of the jurisdiction; and (c) why service out of the jurisdiction cannot be effected⁸. An application may be made without notice⁹.

An order for service on an agent under these provisions must state the period within which the defendant must respond to the particulars of claim¹⁰. Where the court makes an order, a copy of the application notice and the order must be served with the claim form on the agent; and unless the court orders otherwise, the claimant must send to the defendant a copy of the application notice, the order and the claim form¹¹. These provisions do not exclude the court's power¹² to order service by an alternative method or at an alternative place¹³.

148. Service of claim form on children and protected parties.

Special provision is made for the service¹ of the claim form² on children³ and protected parties⁴. Where the defendant⁵ is a child who is not also a protected party, the claim form must be served on one of the child's parents or guardians or, if there is no parent or guardian, an adult with whom the child resides or in whose care the child is⁶. Where the defendant is a protected party, the claim form must be served on one of the following persons with authority in relation to the protected party as (1) the attorney under a registered enduring power of attorney; (2) the donee of a lasting power of attorney; or (3) the deputy appointed by the Court of Protection⁷. If there is no such person, the claim form must be served on an adult with whom the protected party resides or in whose care the protected party is⁸.

The court⁹ may make an order permitting a claim form to be served on a child or protected party, or on a person other than the person specified above¹⁰. An application for such an order may be made without notice¹¹. The court may order that, although a claim form has been sent or given to someone other than the person specified in above, it is to be treated as if it had been properly served¹².

These provisions do not apply where the court has made an order¹³ allowing a child to conduct proceedings without a litigation friend¹⁴.

149. Service of other documents on children and protected parties.

An application for an order appointing a litigation friend¹ where a child² or protected party³ has no litigation friend must be served in accordance with the relevant rules⁴. Any other document which would otherwise be served on a child or a protected party must be served on the litigation friend conducting the proceedings on behalf of the child or protected party⁵.

The court⁶ may make an order permitting a document to be served on the child or protected party or on some person other than the litigation friend or other person required to be served with an application for appointment of a litigation friend⁷. An application for such an order may be made without notice⁸. The court may order that, although a document has been sent or given to someone other than the litigation friend or other specified persons⁹, the document is to be treated as if it had been properly served¹⁰.

151. Deemed service.

A claim form¹ served² in accordance with Part 6 of the Civil Procedure Rules is deemed to be served on the second business day³ after completion of the relevant step⁴ after it has been issued⁵.

A document, other than a claim form, served in accordance with the Civil Procedure Rules or any relevant practice direction, is deemed to be served as follows⁶. If served by:

- 214 (1) first class post or other service which provides for delivery on the next business day, it is deemed to be served on the second day after it was posted, left with, delivered to or collected by the relevant service provider provided that day is a business day or, if not, the next business day after that day;
- 215 (2) document exchange, it is deemed to be served on the second day after it was left with, delivered to or collected by the relevant service provider provided that day is a business day or, if not, the next business day after that day;
- 216 (3) delivering the document to or leaving it at a permitted address, it is deemed to be served, if it is delivered to or left at the permitted address on a business day before 4.30 pm, on that day or, in any other case, on the next business day after that day;
- 217 (4) fax, if the transmission of the fax is completed on a business day before 4.30 pm, it is deemed to be served on that day or, in any other case, on the next business day after the day on which it was transmitted;
- 218 (5) other electronic method, if the e-mail or other electronic transmission is sent on a business day before 4.30 pm, it is deemed to be served on that day or, in any other case, on the next business day after the day on which it was sent;
- 219 (6) personal service, if the document is served personally before 4.30 pm on a business day, it is deemed to be served on that day or, in any other case, on the next business day after that day⁷.

It has been held that in order to establish whether a document has been served in time, the court will not look to the day on which the document actually arrived, whether that day is earlier or later than the date to be derived from the provisions set out above, since uncertainties in the postal system and similar considerations in respect of the other methods of service make it sensible that there should be a date of service which is certain and not subject to challenge on grounds of uncertain and potentially contentious fact⁸.

152. Service by an alternative method or at an alternative place.

Where it appears to the court¹ that there is a good reason to authorise service² of the claim form³ by a method or at a place not otherwise permitted by Part 6 of the Civil Procedure Rules, the court may make an order permitting service by an alternative method or at an alternative place⁴. On such an application, the court may order that steps already taken to bring the claim form to the attention of the defendant⁵ by an alternative method or at an alternative place constitute good service⁶. An application must be supported by evidence⁷ and may be made without notice⁸. The order permitting service by an alternative method or at an alternative place must specify the method or place of service⁹, the date on which the claim form is deemed served¹⁰, and the period for filing an acknowledgment of service, filing an admission or filing a defence¹¹.

These provisions apply to any document in the proceedings as they apply to a claim form¹². They are intended to be used prospectively, rather than retrospectively, and may not be applied to correct a past error with regard to service¹³.

The certificate of service must in most cases⁹ state the category of address at which the claimant believes the claim form has been served and give the following details¹⁰. If the method of service was by:

- 220 (1) personal service, the date of personal service;
- 221 (2) first class post, document exchange or other service which provides for delivery on the next business day, the date of posting or leaving with, delivering to or collection by the relevant service provider;

(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION

(i) Introduction

156. Special provisions about service out of the jurisdiction.

There are special provisions¹ containing rules about service² out of the jurisdiction³, about when the permission of the court⁴ is required to serve out of the jurisdiction and how to obtain such permission⁵ and the procedure for serving out of the jurisdiction⁶. The requirements of those special provisions apply with modifications to Scotland and Northern Ireland⁷ but in general do not apply to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands, any Commonwealth state or any British overseas territory⁸; service in those countries should be effected by the claimant⁹ or his agent direct except in a Commonwealth state whose judicial authorities have required service to be in accordance with the rule¹⁰ for service through foreign governments, judicial authorities and British consular authorities¹¹.

Where service is to be effected in another member state of the European Union, the regulation on the service in the member states of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters (the 'service regulation')¹² applies¹³ and its provisions prevail over other provisions contained in bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements concluded by the member states¹⁴.

In particular, the service regulation prevails over the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968 on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters Protocol art IV (OJ L 299, 13.12.1972, p 32; consolidated version, OJ C27, 26.01.1998, p 1) and over the Hague Convention (15 November 1965; Cmnd 3986). The service regulation does not preclude individual member states from maintaining or concluding agreements or arrangements to expedite further or simplify the transmission of documents, provided that they are compatible with the regulation: EC Parliament and Council Regulation 1393/2007 (OJ L324, 10.12.2007, p 79) art 20(1), (2). Member states must send to the Commission (1) a copy of the agreements or arrangements referred to in art 20(2) concluded between the member states as well as drafts of such agreements or arrangements which they intend to adopt; and (2) any denunciation of, or amendments to, these agreements or arrangements: art 20(3). The service regulation does not affect the application of the Convention on Civil Procedure of 17 July 1905 art 23, the Convention on Civil Procedure of 1 March 1954 art 24 or the Convention on International Access to Justice of 25 October 1980 art 13 between the member states parties to those Conventions (legal aid): EC Parliament and Council Regulation 1393/2007 (OJ L324, 10.12.2007, p 79) art 21.

(ii) European Union Provisions for Service in another Member State

157. In general.

The service regulation¹ applies in civil and commercial matters where a judicial or extrajudicial document has to be transmitted from one member state² to another for service there³, except where the address of the person to be served with the document is not known⁴.

Each member state must designate the public officers, authorities or other persons ('transmitting agencies') competent for the transmission of judicial or extrajudicial documents to be served in another member state⁵ and the public officers, authorities or other persons ('receiving agencies') competent for the receipt of judicial or extrajudicial documents from another member state⁶. A member state may designate one transmitting agency and one receiving agency or one agency to perform both functions. A federal state, a state in which several legal systems apply or a state with autonomous territorial units is free to designate more than one such agency. The designation has effect for a period of five years and may be renewed at five-year intervals⁷.

Each member state must provide the Commission with the following information:

- 232 (1) the names and addresses of the receiving agencies referred to above;
- 233 (2) the geographical areas in which they have jurisdiction;
- 234 (3) the means of receipt of documents available to them; and
- 235 (4) the languages that may be used for the completion of the standard form⁸.

Member states must notify the Commission of any subsequent modification of such information⁹.

Each member state must designate a central body responsible for:

- 236 (a) supplying information to the transmitting agencies;
- 237 (b) seeking solutions to any difficulties which may arise during transmission of documents for service;
- 238 (c) forwarding, in exceptional cases, at the request of a transmitting agency, a request for service to the competent receiving agency¹⁰.

A federal state, a state in which several legal systems apply or a state with autonomous territorial units is free to designate more than one central body¹¹.

SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(ii) European Union Provisions for Service in another Member State/158. Transmission of judicial documents.

158. Transmission of judicial documents.

Judicial documents must be transmitted directly and as soon as possible between the designated agencies¹. The transmission of documents, requests, confirmations, receipts, certificates and any other papers between transmitting agencies and receiving agencies may be carried out by any appropriate means, provided that the content of the document received is true and faithful to that of the document forwarded and that all information in it is easily legible². The document to be transmitted must be accompanied by a request drawn up using the standard form³. The form must be completed in the official language of the member state⁴ addressed or, if there are several official languages in that member state, the official language or one of the official languages of the place where service is to be effected, or in another language which that member state has indicated it can accept. Each member state must indicate the official language or languages of the European Union other than its own which is or are acceptable to it for completion of the form⁵. The documents and all papers that are transmitted must be exempted from legalisation or any equivalent formality⁶.

When the transmitting agency wishes a copy of the document to be returned together with a certificate of service and copy of the document served⁷, it must send the document in duplicate⁸.

Information, including in particular personal data, transmitted under the service regulation⁹ must be used by the receiving agency only for the purpose for which it was transmitted¹⁰. Receiving agencies must ensure the confidentiality of such information, in accordance with their national law¹¹. This provision does not, however, affect national laws enabling data subjects to be informed of the use made of information transmitted under the regulation¹².

1 EC Parliament and Council Regulation 1393/2007 (OJ L324, 10.12.2007, p 79) art 4(1). As the service regulation does not establish any hierarchy between the method of transmission and service referred to in arts 4-11 and that in art 14 (see PARA 165), it is possible to serve in another member state a judicial document such as a judgment by one or other or both of those methods: Case C-473/04 Plumex v Young Sports NV [2006] All ER (D) 120 (Feb), ECJ.

159. Translation of documents.

The applicant must be advised by the transmitting agency¹ to which he or she forwards the document for transmission that the addressee may refuse to accept it if it is not in one of the specified languages². SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(ii) European Union Provisions for Service in another Member State/160. Receipt of documents by receiving agency.

160. Receipt of documents by receiving agency.

On receipt of a document, a receiving agency¹ must, as soon as possible and in any event within seven days of receipt, send a receipt to the transmitting agency² by the swiftest possible means of transmission using the standard form³. Where the request for service cannot be fulfilled on the basis of the information or documents transmitted, the receiving agency must contact the transmitting agency by the swiftest possible means in order to secure the missing information or documents⁴.

If the request for service is manifestly outside the scope of the service regulation⁵ or if non-compliance with the formal conditions required makes service impossible, the request and the documents transmitted must be returned, on receipt, to the transmitting agency, together with the notice of return in the standard form⁶.

A receiving agency receiving a document for service but not having territorial jurisdiction to serve it must forward it, as well as the request, to the receiving agency having territorial jurisdiction in the same member state⁷ if the request complies with the prescribed conditions⁸ and must inform the transmitting agency accordingly, using the standard form⁹. That receiving agency must inform the transmitting agency when it receives the document¹⁰.

10 EC Parliament and Council Regulation 1393/2007 (OJ L324, 10.12.2007, p 79) art 6(4). The transmitting agency must be informed in the manner provided for in art 6(1) (see the text and notes 1-3): art 6(4).

161. Service of documents.

The receiving agency¹ must itself serve the document or have it served, either in accordance with the law of the member state² addressed or by a particular form requested by the transmitting agency³, unless such a method is incompatible with the law of that member state⁴. The receiving agency must take all necessary steps to effect the service of the document as soon as possible, and in any event within one month of receipt⁵. If it has not been possible to effect service within one month of receipt, the receiving agency must immediately inform the transmitting agency by means of the certificate in the standard form⁶, which must be drawn up under the prescribed conditions⁷; and continue to take all necessary steps to effect the service of the document, unless indicated otherwise by the transmitting agency, where service seems to be possible within a reasonable period of time⁸.

The date of service of a document pursuant to this provision is⁹ the date on which it is served in accordance with the law of the member state addressed¹⁰. However, where according to the law of a member state a document has to be served within a particular period, the date to be taken into account with respect to the applicant must be that determined by the law of that member state¹¹.

Member states must communicate to the Commission if, according to their law, a document has to be served within a particular period as referred to in art 9(2): art 23(1).

162. Refusal to accept a document.

The receiving agency¹ must inform the addressee, using the standard form², that he may refuse to accept the document to be served at the time of service or by returning the document to the receiving agency within one week if it is not written in, or accompanied by a translation into, either of the following languages: (1) a language which the addressee understands; or (2) the official language of the member state³ addressed or, if there are several official languages in that member state, the official language or one of the official languages of the place where service is to be effected⁴. Where the receiving agency is informed that the addressee refuses to accept the document in accordance with this provision, it must immediately inform the transmitting agency⁵ by means of the certificate of service⁶ and return the request and the documents of which a translation is requested⁷.

If the addressee has refused to accept the document pursuant to the above provision, the service of the document can be remedied through the service on the addressee in accordance with the provisions of the service regulation⁸ of the document accompanied by a translation into a language provided for above⁹. In that case, the date of service of the document is the date on which the document accompanied by the translation is served in accordance with the law of the member state addressed¹⁰. However, where according to the law of a member state, a document has to be served within a particular period, the date to be taken into account with respect to the applicant is the date of the service of the initial document determined¹¹ by the law of the member state concerned¹².

SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(ii) European Union Provisions for Service in another Member State/163. Certificate of service and copy of the document served.

163. Certificate of service and copy of the document served.

When the formalities concerning the service of the document have been completed, a certificate of completion of those formalities must be drawn up in the standard form¹ addressed to the transmitting agency². When the transmitting agency wishes a copy of the document to be returned³, the certificate must be drawn up together with a copy of the document served⁴.

The certificate must be completed in the official language or one of the official languages of the member state⁵ of origin or in another language which the member state of origin has indicated that it can accept. Each member state must indicate the official language or languages of the institutions of the European Union other than its own which is or are acceptable to it for completion of the form⁶.

164. Costs of service.

The service of judicial documents coming from a member state¹ must not give rise to any payment or reimbursement of taxes or costs for services rendered by the member state addressed². The applicant must, however, pay or reimburse the costs occasioned by recourse to a judicial officer or to a person competent under the law of the member state addressed, and the use of a particular method of service³. Costs occasioned by recourse to a judicial officer or to a person competent under the law of the member state addressed must correspond to a single fixed fee laid down by that member state in advance which respects the principles of proportionality and non-discrimination⁴. Member states must communicate such fixed fees to the Commission⁵.

165. Other means of transmission and service of judicial documents.

Each member state¹ is free, in exceptional circumstances, to use consular or diplomatic channels to forward judicial documents, for the purpose of service, to designated agencies² of another member state³. Each member state is also free to effect service of judicial documents on persons residing in another member state, without application of any compulsion, directly through its diplomatic or consular agents⁴. Any member state may, however, make it known⁵ that it is opposed to such service within its territory, unless the documents are to be served on nationals of the member state in which the documents originate⁶.

Each member state is free to effect service of judicial documents directly by postal services on persons residing in another member state by registered letter with acknowledgment of receipt or equivalent⁷.

Any person interested in a judicial proceeding may effect service of judicial documents directly through the judicial officers, officials or other competent persons of the member state addressed, where such direct service is permitted under the law of that member state⁸.

SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(ii) European Union Provisions for Service in another Member State/167. Service to be established before judgment given where defendant does not enter an appearance.

167. Service to be established before judgment given where defendant does not enter an appearance.

Where a claim form or an equivalent document has had to be transmitted to another member state¹ for the purpose of service, under the provisions of the service regulation², and the defendant has not appeared, judgment must not be given until it is established that:

- 239 (1) the document was served by a method prescribed by the internal law of the member state addressed for the service of documents in domestic actions upon persons who are within its territory; or
- 240 (2) the document was actually delivered to the defendant or to his residence by another method provided for by the service regulation, and that in either of these cases the service or the delivery was effected in sufficient time to enable the defendant to defend³. Each member state may, however, make it known⁴ that the judge, notwithstanding the above provisions, may give judgment even if no certificate of service or delivery has been received, if all the following conditions are fulfilled:

- 241 (a) the document was transmitted by one of the methods provided for in the service regulation;
- 242 (b) a period of time of not less than six months, considered adequate by the judge in the particular case, has elapsed since the date of the transmission of the document;
- 243 (c) no certificate of any kind has been received, even though every reasonable effort has been made to obtain it through the competent authorities or bodies of the member state addressed⁵.

Notwithstanding the above provisions, the judge may order, in case of urgency, any provisional or protective measures⁶.

When a claim form or an equivalent document has had to be transmitted to another member state for the purpose of service, under the provisions of the service regulation, and a judgment has been entered against a defendant who has not appeared, the judge has the power to relieve the defendant from the effects of the expiration of the time for appeal from the judgment if the following conditions are fulfilled:

- 244 (i) the defendant, without any fault on his part, did not have knowledge of the document in sufficient time to defend, or knowledge of the judgment in sufficient time to appeal; and
- 245 (ii) the defendant has disclosed a prima facie defence to the action on the merits⁷.

An application for relief may be filed only within a reasonable time after the defendant has knowledge of the judgment⁸. This provision does not, however, apply to judgments concerning status or capacity of persons⁹.

(iii) Provisions under Domestic Law for Service out of the Jurisdiction

168. Service of claim form where permission of the court is not required: Scotland or Northern Ireland.

The claimant¹ may serve² the claim form on a defendant³ in Scotland or Northern Ireland where each claim made against the defendant to be served and included in the claim form is a claim which the court⁴ has power to determine under the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982⁵ and:

- 246 (1) no proceedings between the parties concerning the same claim are pending in the courts of any other part of the United Kingdom⁶; and
- 247 (2) the defendant is domiciled⁷ in the United Kingdom⁸, the proceedings are within the provision of the 1982 Act relating to exclusive jurisdiction⁹, or the defendant is a party to an agreement conferring jurisdiction¹⁰ under the 1982 Act¹¹.

The claimant may serve the claim form on a defendant in Scotland or Northern Ireland where each claim made against the defendant to be served and included in the claim form is a claim which the court has power to determine under any enactment other than the 1982 Act notwithstanding that the person against whom the claim is made is not within the jurisdiction or the facts giving rise to the claim did not occur within the jurisdiction¹².

Where the claimant intends to serve a claim form on a defendant under these provisions, the claimant must file¹³ with the claim form a notice containing a statement of the grounds on which the claimant is entitled to serve the claim form out of the jurisdiction and serve a copy of that notice with the claim form¹⁴. Where the claimant fails to file with the claim form a copy of the notice, the claim form may only be served once the claimant files the notice or if the court gives permission¹⁵.

- 251 (b) the defendant is domiciled¹⁴ in the United Kingdom or in any member state¹⁵, the proceedings are within the exclusive jurisdiction provision of the judgments regulation¹⁶ or the defendant is a party to an agreement conferring jurisdiction¹⁷.

The claimant may serve the claim form on a defendant out of the United Kingdom where each claim made against the defendant to be served and included in the claim form is a claim which the court has power to determine other than under the 1982 Act or the judgments regulation, notwithstanding that the person against whom the claim is made is not within the jurisdiction or that the facts giving rise to the claim did not occur within the jurisdiction¹⁸.

Where the claimant intends to serve a claim form on a defendant out of the jurisdiction under these provisions, the claimant must file¹⁹ with the claim form a notice containing a statement of the grounds on which the claimant is entitled to serve the claim form out of the jurisdiction and serve a copy of that notice with the claim form²⁰. SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Provisions under Domestic Law for Service out of the Jurisdiction/170. Service out of the jurisdiction where the permission of the court is required.

170. Service out of the jurisdiction where the permission of the court is required.

In any proceedings to which the rules providing that the permission of the court¹ is not required for service² out of the jurisdiction³ do not apply, the claimant⁴ may serve a claim form out of the jurisdiction with the permission of the court if any of the following grounds apply⁵:

- 252 (1) a claim is made for a remedy against a person domiciled⁶ within the jurisdiction⁷;
- 253 (2) a claim is made for an injunction⁸ ordering the defendant⁹ to do or refrain from doing an act within the jurisdiction¹⁰;
- 254 (3) a claim is made against a person (the 'defendant') on whom the claim form has been or will be served, and there is between the claimant and that person a real issue which it is reasonable for the court to try and the claimant wishes to serve the claim form on another person who is a necessary or proper party to that claim¹¹;
- 255 (4) a claim is an additional claim¹² and the person to be served is a necessary or proper party to the claim or additional claim¹³;
- 256 (5) a claim is made¹⁴ for an interim remedy¹⁵;
- 257 (6) a claim is made in respect of a contract where the contract was made within the jurisdiction, was made by or through an agent trading or residing within the jurisdiction, is governed by English law or contains a term conferring jurisdiction on the court to determine any claim in respect of the contract¹⁶;
- 258 (7) a claim is made in respect of a breach of contract committed within the jurisdiction¹⁷;
- 259 (8) a claim is made for a declaration that no contract exists where, if the contract was found to exist, it would comply with the conditions set out in head (6) above¹⁸;
- 260 (9) a claim is made in tort where damage was sustained within the jurisdiction or the damage sustained resulted from an act committed within the jurisdiction¹⁹;
- 261 (10) a claim is made to enforce any judgment or arbitral award²⁰;
- 262 (11) the whole subject matter of a claim relates to property located within the jurisdiction²¹;
- 263 (12) a claim is made for any remedy which might be obtained in proceedings to execute the trusts of a written instrument where the trusts ought to be executed according to English law and the person on whom the claim form is to be served is a trustee of the trusts²²;
- 264 (13) a claim is made for any remedy which might be obtained in proceedings for the administration of the estate of a person who died domiciled within the jurisdiction²³;
- 265 (14) a probate claim or a claim for the rectification of a will is made²⁴;
- 266 (15) a claim is made for a remedy against the defendant as constructive trustee where the defendant's alleged liability arises out of acts committed within the jurisdiction²⁵;
- 267 (16) a claim is made for restitution where the defendant's alleged liability arises out of acts committed within the jurisdiction²⁶;
- 268 (17) a claim is made by the Commissioners of Revenue and Customs relating to duties or taxes against a defendant not domiciled in Scotland or Northern Ireland²⁷;

- 269 (18) a claim is made by a party to proceedings for an order that the court exercise its power²⁸ to make a costs order in favour of or against a person who is not a party to those proceedings²⁹;
- 270 (19) a claim is made in the nature of salvage and any part of the services took place within the jurisdiction or a claim is made³⁰ to enforce a claim for liability for oil pollution³¹;
- 271 (20) a claim is made under an enactment which allows proceedings to be brought and those proceedings are not covered by any of the other grounds referred to above or under the relevant European legislation³² where service is to be effected in a member state of the European Union³³.

The above procedure is concerned in substance with claims asserted by the claimant, not claims asserted against the claimant, and with claims for relief founded on a right asserted by the claimant in the proceedings³⁴.

170 Service out of the jurisdiction where the permission of the court is required

NOTE 16--See Rimpacific Navigation INC v Daehan Shipbuilding Co Ltd [2009] EWHC 2941 (Comm), [2009] All ER (D) 277 (Nov) (exclusive jurisdiction clause granting jurisdiction to English courts in contract of guarantee not separable; issue of jurisdiction decided under main contract of guarantee).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/6. SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Provisions under Domestic Law for Service out of the Jurisdiction/171. Application for permission to serve claim form out of jurisdiction.

171. Application for permission to serve claim form out of jurisdiction.

An application for permission to serve¹ a claim form² out of the jurisdiction³ must set out:

- 272 (1) which ground⁴ is relied on⁵;
- 273 (2) that the claimant⁶ believes that the claim has a reasonable prospect of success⁷; and
- 274 (3) the defendant's⁸ address or, if not known, in what place the defendant is, or is likely, to be found⁹.

The court will not give permission unless satisfied that England or Wales is a proper place in which to bring the claim¹⁰. In particular, where the application is for permission to serve a claim form in Scotland or Northern Ireland and it appears to the court that the claimant may also be entitled to a remedy there, the court, in deciding whether to give permission, will compare the cost and convenience of proceeding there or in the jurisdiction and, where relevant, have regard to the powers and jurisdiction of the sheriff court in Scotland or the county courts or courts of summary jurisdiction in Northern Ireland¹¹.

Where the court gives permission to serve a claim form out of the jurisdiction, it will specify the periods within which the defendant may file¹² an acknowledgment of service¹³, file or serve an admission¹⁴, file a defence¹⁵ or file any other response or document required by a rule in another Part of the Civil Procedure Rules, any other enactment or a practice direction¹⁶, and it may give directions about the method of service¹⁷ and give permission for other documents in the proceedings to be served out of the jurisdiction¹⁸.

3 Ie under CPR 6.36 (see PARA 170): CPR 6.37(1). As to the meaning of 'jurisdiction' see PARA 117 note 6. As to service of documents other than the claim form see PARA 172.

7 CPR 6.37(1)(b). The merits threshold test under CPR 6.36 (see PARA 170) does not differ in substance from that under CPR 24.2 (summary judgment: see PARA 524); that is demanded by the whole philosophy of the overriding objective and the fact that a defendant is foreign makes no difference in principle: see De Molestina v Ponton [2002] 1 All ER (Comm) 587, [2001] All ER (D) 206 (May) per Colman J. See also Cherney v Deripaska [2008] EWHC 1530 (Comm), [2008] All ER (D) 37 (Jul). As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

8 As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 138 note 6.

9 CPR 6.37(1)(c). Where the application is made in respect of a claim referred to in Practice Direction--Service out of the Jurisdiction PD 6B para 3.1(3) (see PARA 170 head (3)), the application must also state the grounds on which the claimant believes that there is, between the claimant and the defendant a real issue which it is reasonable for the court to try: CPR 6.37(2). As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22. A claimant who has been granted permission to serve out of the jurisdiction remains under a duty to make full and frank disclosure until the proceedings are served: Network Telecom (Europe) Ltd v Telephone Systems International

12 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

13 CPR 6.37(5)(a)(i). Where an order grants permission to serve a claim form out of the jurisdiction, the periods within which the defendant may file an acknowledgment of service, file or serve an admission and file a defence are calculated in accordance with Practice Direction--Service out of the Jurisdiction PD 6B para 6.3, 6.4 or 6.5 having regard to the Table set out in that practice direction: para 6.2. The period for filing an acknowledgment of service under CPR Pt 10 or filing or serving an admission under CPR Pt 14 is the number of days listed in the Table after service of the particulars of claim: para 6.3; eg, where a defendant has been served with a claim form in the Bahamas, the period for acknowledging service or admitting the claim is 22 days after service. Where service is effected on a foreign state, the state being served is allowed an additional two months: para 6.5; see PARAS 185 note 14, 204 note 14, 177 text and note 14.

14 CPR 6.37(5)(a)(ii); and see note 13.

15 CPR 6.37(5)(a)(iii). The period for filing a defence under CPR Pt 15 is (1) the number of days listed in the Table after service of the particulars of claim; or (2) where the defendant has filed an acknowledgment of service, the number of days listed in the Table plus an additional 14 days after the service of the particulars of claim; eg where a defendant has been served with particulars of claim in Gibraltar and has acknowledged service, the period for filing a defence is 45 days after service of the particulars of claim: Practice Direction--Service out of the Jurisdiction PD 6B para 6.4. See also CPR Pt 11 (procedure by which a defendant may dispute the court's jurisdiction); and PARA 206. CPR 6.37(5)(a)(i)-(iii) does not apply where an application notice is to be served on a non party out of the jurisdiction: see CPR 6.39; and PARA 172.

SERVICE OF DOCUMENTS/(3) SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Provisions under Domestic Law for Service out of the Jurisdiction/172. Application for permission to serve documents other than claim form out of jurisdiction.

172. Application for permission to serve documents other than claim form out of jurisdiction.

Unless the provisions following apply, where the permission of the court¹ is required for the claimant² to serve³ the claim form out of the jurisdiction⁴, the claimant must obtain permission to serve any other document in the proceedings out of the jurisdiction⁵.

Where the court gives permission for a claim form to be served on a defendant⁶ out of the jurisdiction and the claim form states that particulars of claim are to follow, the permission of the court is not required to serve the particulars of claim⁷; and the permission of the court is not required if a party has given an address for service in Scotland or Northern Ireland⁸.

Where an application notice is to be served out of the jurisdiction on a person who is not a party to the proceedings there is no requirement for a period to be specified for the filing of an acknowledgment of service, a form of admission or a defence⁹ and the provisions of the rules relating to the time for calculating those periods and filing such documents¹⁰ do not apply¹¹. Where an application is served out of the jurisdiction on a person who is not a party to the proceedings, that person may make an application to the court disputing the court's jurisdiction¹² as if that person were a defendant, but he is not required to file an acknowledgment of service¹³.

173. Method of service; general provisions.

Where a party serves¹ any document on a party in Scotland or Northern Ireland, it must be served by a permitted method for service², and any document to be served in proceedings must be sent or transmitted to, or left at, the party's address for service³ unless it is to be served personally or the court orders otherwise⁴.

Where the claimant wishes to serve a claim form⁵ or any other document on a defendant⁶ out of the United Kingdom, it may be served:

- 275 (1) by any method provided for by the rule relating to service in accordance with the service regulation⁷, the rule relating to service through foreign governments, judicial authorities and British Consular authorities⁸ or the rule⁹ relating to service on a state¹⁰;

175. Service through foreign governments, judicial authorities and British Consular authorities.

Where the claimant¹ wishes to serve² a claim form or any other document on a defendant³ in any country which is a party to a Civil Procedure Convention⁴ providing for service in that country, it may be served through the authority designated under the Hague Convention⁵ (where relevant) in respect of that country⁶ or, if the law of that country permits, through the judicial authorities of that country⁷ or through a British Consular authority in that country (subject to any provisions of the applicable convention about the nationality of persons who may be served by such a method)⁸.

Where the claimant wishes to serve a claim form or any other document on a defendant in any country with respect to which there is no Civil Procedure Convention providing for service in that country, the claim form or other document may be served, if the law of that country so permits, through the government of that country, where that government is willing to serve it⁹, or through a British Consular authority in that country¹⁰.

Where the claimant wishes to serve the claim form or other document in any Commonwealth state¹¹ which is not a party to the Hague Convention, the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands or any British overseas territory¹², the methods of service through the judicial authorities or through a British Consular authority¹³ are not available and the claimant or the claimant's agent must effect service direct, unless the relevant practice direction provides otherwise¹⁴.

He must also file a copy of the claim form or other document¹¹, any other documents or copies of documents required by the relevant practice direction¹², and any required¹³ translation¹⁴. Where the claimant files the specified documents, the court officer¹⁵ will seal¹⁶ the copy of the claim form or other document and forward the documents to the Senior Master¹⁷. Where a claimant¹ wishes to serve² a claim form or other document on a state³ he must file⁴ in the Central Office of the Royal Courts of Justice a request for service to be arranged by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, a copy of the claim form or other document and any translation⁵ required⁶. The Senior Master⁷ will send the documents so filed to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with a request that it arranges for them to be served⁸. Where the state has agreed to a method of service¹¹ other than through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the claim form or other document may be served either by the method agreed or in accordance with this rule¹².

Where service is effected on a state the usual period for acknowledging service¹³ is extended by two months¹⁴.

Where CPR 6.35(5) applies, the periods within which the defendant must file an acknowledgment of service or file or serve an admission or file a defence, will be calculated in accordance with para 6.3 or 6.5: para 6.1. The period for filing an acknowledgment of service under CPR Pt 10 or for filing or serving an admission under CPR Pt 14 is the number of days listed in the Table after service of the particulars of claim: para 6.3. The Table lists a large number of foreign countries and territories and gives the number of days allowed for responding to service. Under the State Immunity Act 1978 (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 244 et seq), where a state is served, the period permitted under para 6.3 for filing an acknowledgment of service or for filing or serving an admission does not begin to run until two months after the date on which the state is served: Practice Direction--Service out of the Jurisdiction PD 6B para 6.5. See also PARA 177.

Where particulars of claim are served out of the jurisdiction any statement as to the period for responding to the claim contained in any of the forms required by CPR 7.8 to accompany the particulars of claim must specify the period prescribed under CPR 6.35: Practice Direction--Service out of the Jurisdiction PD 6B para 6.6.

186. Consequence of not filing an acknowledgment of service.

If a defendant¹ fails to file² an acknowledgment of service within the specified period³ and does not within that period file a defence⁴ or serve or file an admission⁵, the claimant⁶ may be entitled to obtain default judgment⁷.

3 The period specified in CPR 10.3: see CPR 10.2(a). The general rule is that the period for filing an acknowledgment of service is 14 days after service of the claim form: CPR 10.3(1)(b). Where the defendant is served with a claim form which states that particulars of claim are to follow, the period for filing an acknowledgment of service is 14 days after service of the particulars of claim: CPR 10.3(1)(a). The general rule is subject to (1) CPR 6.35 (calculation of period for filing an acknowledgment of service when the claim form is served out of the jurisdiction: see PARA 185); (2) CPR 6.12(3) (court required to specify the period for responding to particulars of claim when making an order under the rule relating to service on the agent of an overseas principal: see PARA 147); and (3) CPR 6.37(5) (court to specify period within which the defendant may file an acknowledgment of service when it makes an order giving permission to serve a claim form out of the jurisdiction): see CPR 10.3(2). As to the period when service is effected out of the jurisdiction see PARAS 171 note 13, 204. Where service is to be effected on a foreign state, the state being served is allowed an additional two months: see PARAS 185 note 14, 204 note 14, 177 text and notes 13-14. As to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2. As to the application of CPR 10.3(2) to Part 8 claims see PARA 130 note 9.

(3) ADMISSIONS

187. Making an admission after commencement of proceedings.

A party may admit the truth of the whole or any part of another party's case¹, which he may do by giving notice in writing (such as in a statement of case² or by letter)³. Where the only remedy which the claimant⁴ is seeking is the payment of money, the defendant⁵ may also make an admission⁶. Where the defendant makes such an admission, the claimant has a right to enter judgment except where the defendant is a child⁷ or protected party⁸ or the claimant is a child or protected party and the admission is made under the rule relating to the admission of part of a claim for a specified amount of money⁹ or under the rule relating to the admission of liability for an unspecified amount¹⁰ where the defendant offers a sum in satisfaction of the claim¹¹.

The permission of the court is required to amend or withdraw an admission¹².

2 As to the meaning of 'statement of case' see PARA 584.

3 CPR 14.1(2). When particulars of claim are served on a defendant the forms for responding to the claim that will accompany them will include a form for making an admission: see Practice Direction--Admissions PD 14 para 2.1. The form will be either Practice form N9A (specified amount) or Practice form N9C (unspecified amount). As to admission before commencement of proceedings see PARA 188.

188. Admissions made before commencement of proceedings.

A person may, by giving notice in writing, admit the truth of the whole or any part of another party's case before commencement of proceedings (a 'pre-action admission')¹. The provisions below apply to a pre-action admission made in the specified types of proceedings² if one of the following conditions is met:

- 295 (1) it is made after the party making it has received a letter before claim in accordance with Practice Direction (Pre-action Conduct) or any relevant pre-action protocol; or
- 296 (2) it is made before such letter before claim has been received, but it is stated to be made under the specified part³ of the Civil Procedure Rules⁴.

A person may, by giving notice in writing, withdraw a pre-action admission (a) before commencement of proceedings, if the person to whom the admission was made agrees; (b) after commencement of proceedings, if all parties to the proceedings consent or with the permission of the court⁵.

After commencement of proceedings, any party may apply for judgment on the pre-action admission; and the party who made the pre-action admission may apply to withdraw it⁶. An application to withdraw a pre-action admission or to enter judgment on such an admission must be made in accordance with the general rules about applications for court orders⁷. It may be made as a cross-application⁸.

2 Ie those listed in Practice Direction--Admissions PD 14 para 1.1(2). CPR 14.1A applies only to admissions in proceedings to which one of the following pre-action protocols apply: (1) the pre-action protocol for personal injury claims; (2) the pre-action protocol for the resolution of clinical disputes; or (3) the pre-action protocol for disease and illness claims: Practice Direction--Admissions PD 14 para 1.1(2). As to the pre-action protocols see PARA 107. The pre-action protocol for personal injury claims states that it is primarily designed for certain types of personal injury claim with a value of less than £15,000; but the Pre-action Protocol for Personal Injury Claims (1999) para 2.2 indicates that it generally applies to all claims which include a claim for personal injury: Practice Direction--Admissions PD 14 para 1.1(2).

189. Period for making an admission.

The period for returning an admission in respect of the whole of a claim for a specified amount of money¹ or for filing² an admission in other cases³ is 14 days after service of the claim form⁴. Where, however, the defendant⁵ is served with a claim form which states that particulars of claim will follow, the prescribed period for returning or filing an admission is 14 days after service of the particulars⁶. These provisions are subject to the special rules (1) specifying how the period for filing or returning an admission is calculated where the claim form is served out of the jurisdiction⁷; and (2) requiring the court to specify the period for responding to the particulars of claim⁸ when it makes an order⁹ permitting a claim form relating to a contract to be served on the agent of an overseas principal¹⁰.

A defendant may return¹¹ or file¹² an admission after the end of the specified period¹³ for returning or filing it, if the claimant has not obtained default judgment¹⁴ and, if he does so, the provisions relating to admissions will apply as if he had made the admission within the specified period¹⁵.

The defendant may also file a defence¹⁶.

191. Admission of whole of claim for specified amount of money.

Where the only remedy which the claimant¹ is seeking is the payment of a specified amount of money², and the defendant³ admits the whole of the claim⁴, the defendant may admit the claim by returning to the claimant a form of admission⁵. The claimant may obtain judgment by filing a request form⁶ and if the defendant has not requested time to pay⁷, the claimant may specify in his request for judgment the date by which the whole of the judgment debt is to be paid⁸ or the times and rate at which it is to be paid by instalments⁹. On receipt of the request for judgment the court¹⁰ will enter judgment¹¹ which will be for the amount of the claim (less any payments made) and costs to be paid by the date or at the rate specified by the claimant in the request for judgment¹² or, if no date or rate is specified, immediately¹³.

Judgment under the above provisions will include the amount of interest claimed to the date of judgment if:

- 297 (1) the particulars of claim include the requisite details¹⁴;
- 298 (2) where interest is claimed under the Supreme Court Act 1981¹⁵ or the County Courts Act 1984¹⁶, the rate is no higher than the rate of interest payable on judgment debts at the date when the claim form was issued¹⁷; and
- 299 (3) the claimant's request for judgment includes a calculation of the interest claimed for the period from the date up to which interest was stated to be calculated in the claim form to the date of the request for judgment¹⁸.

In any case where judgment is entered under these provisions but the above conditions are not satisfied, the judgment will be for an amount of interest to be decided by the court¹⁹ and the court will give directions for the management of the case²⁰.

A different procedure applies if the defendant has requested time to pay²¹.

UPDATE

191 Admission of whole of claim for specified amount of money

NOTE 17--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/7. RESPONDING TO A CLAIM/(3) ADMISSIONS/192. Admission of part of a claim for a specified amount of money.

192. Admission of part of a claim for a specified amount of money.

Where the only remedy which the claimant¹ is seeking is the payment of a specified amount of money² and the defendant³ admits part of the claim⁴, he may do so by filing⁵ a form of admission⁶. On receipt of the admission, the court⁷ will serve⁸ a notice on the claimant requiring him to return the notice stating that:

- 300 (1) he accepts the amount admitted in satisfaction of the claim⁹;
- 301 (2) he does not accept the amount admitted by the defendant and wishes the proceedings to continue¹⁰; or
- 302 (3) if the defendant has requested time to pay, he accepts the amount admitted in satisfaction of the claim, but not the defendant's proposals as to payment¹¹.

The claimant must file the notice and serve a copy on the defendant within 14 days after it is served on him¹². If he does not, the claim must be stayed¹³ until he files the notice¹⁴.

If the claimant accepts the amount admitted in satisfaction of the claim, he may obtain judgment by filing a request form¹⁵ and, if the defendant has not requested time to pay¹⁶, the claimant may specify in his request for judgment the date by which the whole of the judgment debt is to be paid¹⁷ or the time and rate at which it is to be paid by instalments¹⁸. On receipt of the request for judgment, the court will enter judgment¹⁹, which will be for the amount admitted (less any payments made) and costs to be paid by the date or at the rate specified by the claimant in the request for judgment²⁰ or, if no date or rate is specified, immediately²¹.

193. Admission of liability to pay whole of claim for unspecified amount of money.

Where:

- 303 (1) the only remedy which the claimant¹ is seeking is the payment of money²;
- 304 (2) the amount of the claim is not specified³; and
- 305 (3) the defendant⁴ admits liability but does not offer to pay a specified amount of money in satisfaction of the claim⁵, the defendant may admit the claim by filing⁶ a form of admission⁷. On receipt of the admission, the court⁸ will serve⁹ a copy on the claimant¹⁰.

The claimant may obtain judgment by filing a request in the relevant practice form¹¹. If the claimant does not file a request for judgment within 14 days after service of the admission on him, the claim is stayed¹² until he files the request¹³. On receipt of the request for judgment the court will enter judgment¹⁴ which will be for an amount to be decided by the court and costs¹⁵. 194. Admission of liability to pay claim for unspecified amount of money where defendant offers a sum in satisfaction of the claim.

Where:

- 306 (1) the only remedy which the claimant¹ is seeking is the payment of money²;
- 307 (2) the amount of the claim is not specified³; and
- 308 (3) the defendant⁴ admits liability⁵ and offers to pay a specified amount of money in satisfaction of the claim⁶, the defendant may admit the claim by filing⁷ a form of admission⁸. On receipt of the admission, the court⁹ will serve¹⁰ a notice on the claimant requiring him to return the notice stating whether or not he accepts the amount in satisfaction of the claim¹¹. 195. Request for time to pay.

A defendant¹ who makes an admission relating to a claim for a specified amount of money or offering to pay a specified amount of money² may make a request for time to pay³, which is a proposal about the date of payment or a proposal to pay by instalments at the times and rate specified in the request⁴. The defendant's request for time to pay must be served⁵ or filed⁶, as the case may be, with his admission⁷. If the claimant⁸ accepts the defendant's request, he may obtain judgment by filing a request in the relevant practice form⁹. On receipt of the request for judgment, the court¹⁰ will enter judgment¹¹, which will be for the amount:

- 309 (1) of the claim (less any payments made) and costs, where the admission is of the whole claim, which is for a specified amount¹²;
- 310 (2) admitted (less any payments made) and costs, where the admission is of part of a claim for a specified amount of money¹³; or
- 311 (3) offered by the defendant in satisfaction of the claim (less any payments made) and costs, where the admission is of liability to pay a claim¹⁴ for an unspecified amount of money¹⁵.

In all cases the judgment will be for payment at the time and rate specified in the defendant's request for time to pay¹⁶.

A different procedure applies if the claimant does not accept the defendant's request for time to pay¹⁷.

196. Determination of rate of payment.

Where the defendant¹ makes a request for time to pay² but the claimant³ does not accept the defendant's proposals for payment, the claimant must file⁴ a notice in the relevant practice form⁵. Where the defendant's admission was served⁶ direct on the claimant, a copy of the admission and the request for time to pay must be filed with the claimant's notice⁷. When the court⁸ receives the claimant's notice, it will enter judgment for the amount admitted (less any payments made) to be paid at the time and rate of payment determined by the court⁹. A court officer¹⁰ may exercise the powers of the court to determine the rate and time for payment where the amount outstanding (including costs) is not more than £50,000¹¹. He must do so without a hearing¹² and will have regard to the defendant's statement of means¹³, the claimant's objections¹⁴ and any other relevant factors¹⁵.

Either party may, on account of a change of circumstances since the date of the decision, apply to vary the time and rate of payment of instalments still remaining unpaid¹⁶.

197. Determination of rate of payment by judge.

Where a judge¹ is to determine the time and rate of payment, he may do so without a hearing², but where a judge is to do so at a hearing, the proceedings must be transferred automatically to the defendant's home court³ if:

- 315 (4) the claim was not started in the defendant's home court⁹; and
- 316 (5) the claim was not started in a specialist list¹⁰.

If there is to be a hearing to determine the time and rate of payment, the court must give each party at least seven days' notice of the hearing¹¹.

The judge will have regard to the defendant's statement of means¹², the claimant's objections¹³ and any other relevant factors¹⁴.

198. Right of re-determination.

Where a court officer¹ has determined the time and rate of payment² or a judge³ has determined the time and rate of payment⁴ without a hearing, either party may apply for the decision to be re-determined by a judge⁵. An application for re-determination must be made within 14 days after service⁶ of the determination on the applicant⁷. Where an application for re-determination is made, the proceedings must be transferred to the defendant's home court⁸ if:

- 320 (4) the claim was not started in the defendant's home court¹⁴; and
- 321 (5) the claim was not started in a specialist list¹⁵.

A defendant¹ who wishes to defend all or part of a claim must file² a defence³, except where the claimant uses the alternative procedure for claims⁴. (5) DISPUTING THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT 206. Procedure for disputing the court's jurisdiction.

A defendant¹ who wishes to dispute the court's² jurisdiction to try the claim, or argue that the court should not exercise its jurisdiction, may apply to the court for an order declaring that it has no such jurisdiction or should not exercise any jurisdiction which it may have³. A defendant who wishes to make such an application must first file⁴ an acknowledgment of service⁵; he does not, by doing so, lose any right that he may have to dispute the court's jurisdiction⁶.

Such an application must be made within 14 days after filing an acknowledgment of service⁷ and be supported by evidence⁸. If the defendant files an acknowledgment of service and does not make such an application within the period specified, he is to be treated as having accepted that the court has jurisdiction to try the claim⁹.

An order containing a declaration that the court has no jurisdiction or will not exercise its jurisdiction may also make further provision including:

- 322 (1) setting aside¹⁰ the claim form¹¹;
- 323 (2) setting aside service¹² of the claim form¹³;
- 324 (3) discharging any order made before the claim was commenced or before the claim form was served¹⁴; and
- 325 (4) staying¹⁵ the proceedings¹⁶.

If on such an application the court does not make a declaration, the acknowledgment of service ceases to have effect¹⁷, the defendant may file a further acknowledgment of service within 14 days or such other period as the court may direct¹⁸ and the court must give directions as to the filing and service of the defence¹⁹ or, if the claimant²⁰ uses the alternative procedure for claims²¹, the filing of evidence in the event that a further acknowledgment of service is filed²². If the defendant files such a further acknowledgment of service he must be treated as having accepted that the court has jurisdiction to try the claim²³.

If a defendant makes such an application, he must file and serve his written evidence in support with the application notice, but he need not before the hearing of the application file a defence²⁴ or, in an alternative procedure claim²⁵, any other written evidence²⁶.

8. PARTIES

(1) INTRODUCTION

207. Parties generally.

The general rule of law is that any person, natural or artificial, may sue or be sued in the English courts¹, but, whilst this rule remains paramount, the exceptions to it are extensive and reflect the enormous diversities which inevitably exist between different persons or bodies and the legal rights and duties attaching to each of them, and the consequent necessity for the provision of special rules of procedure to regulate legal proceedings brought by or against each of them.

In order that a claim may be properly constituted, there must be at least two persons, one the claimant or the person who sues and the other the defendant or the person who is sued².

In general, parties must be named in the claim form. However this is subject to certain exceptions³.

A cause or matter will not be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of any party, and the court may determine the issues or questions in dispute so far as they affect the rights and interests of the persons who are parties to the cause or matter⁴. As a general principle, the court will permit all necessary and proper parties, but no others, to be made parties to the proceedings in order to enable the court to reach an effectual and complete determination of the questions or issues arising in the proceedings.

1 A person under disability, whether a child or a protected party, may sue or be sued, but proceedings by or against him are subject to special rules of procedure (see CPR Pt 21; and PARA 222), and there may be special rules about granting particular relief or a particular remedy in such cases. For instance, it was formerly held that specific performance could not be granted in favour of or against a minor: Flight v Bolland (1828) 4 Russ 298; Lumley v Ravenscroft[1895] 1 QB 683, CA. An English body corporate, including a limited liability company, or an unincorporated body such as partners carrying on business within the jurisdiction, may sue and be sued and so may individual foreigners and foreign corporations (see Dutch West India Co v Henriques Van Moses (1728) 1 Stra 612, HL; Newby v Von Oppen and Colt's Patent Firearms Manufacturing Co(1872) LR 7 QB 293; Compagnie Générale Trans-Atlantique v Thomas Law & Co, La Bourgogne[1899] AC 431, HL; Logan v Bank of Scotland (No 2)[1906] 1 KB 141, CA). But an alien enemy cannot sue as claimant (Porter v Freudenberg[1915] 1 KB 857, CA) or issue a third party notice (Halsey v Lowenfeld[1916] 2 KB 707, CA), although he may be sued in England and, if sued to judgment, may appeal (see Porter v Freudenberg[1915] 1 KB 857, CA). The rule that a national of a state with which the United Kingdom is in a state of war may not sue in the United Kingdom courts does not extend to nationals of states with which the United Kingdom is involved in lesser forms of armed conflict: Amin v Brown[2005] EWHC 1670 (Ch), [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Jul). An alien friend may sue, even though under disability in his own country, if his disability is not recognised in England: see Re Selot's Trust[1902] 1 Ch 488.

2 As to joinder of parties see PARAS 210-212; as to change of parties see PARA 213 et seq; and as to representative parties see PARAS 229-231. The same person cannot be a claimant and a defendant in the same proceedings: Re Phillips, Public Trustee v Meyer [1931] WN 271. A party should not be named twice on the record, in his personal capacity and in a representative capacity: Hardie and Lane Ltd v Chiltern[1928] 1 KB 663, CA. Partners carrying on business within the jurisdiction may sue or be sued in the partnership name if it has one (see PARA 224), but a partnership firm is not a legal entity (see Sadler v Whiteman[1910] 1 KB 868, CA, and PARTNERSHIP vol 79 (2008) PARAS 1-3).

3 See CPR 8.2A, which provides that in certain circumstances, such as for an order that a fund in court be paid out, a claim form may be issued with the permission of the court; and PARA 129. Where persons whose identity is unknown are or remain in possession of land without the consent of a claimant entitled to possession of the land they may be sued as 'persons unknown': see CPR 55.3(4). But a description of defendants as owners of certain property is not enough: Friern Barnet UDC v Adams[1927] 2 Ch 25, CA. See also South Cambridgeshire District Council v Persons Unknown[2004] EWCA Civ 1280, [2005] JPL 680 (injunction to prevent breach of planning control granted against persons unknown). As to the claim form see further PARA 117 et seq.

4 As to joinder of parties see CPR 19.1, 19.3; and PARA 210 et seq.

208. Claimants generally.

Claimants, formerly called plaintiffs, are persons who make a claim¹. A person cannot be a claimant unless he has an interest in the subject matter of the claim².

In a claim founded on contract, the proper claimant is the person with whom or on whose behalf the contract was made, or in whom the rights under the contract are vested³.

Subject to the provisions of any Act and unless the court gives permission to the contrary, all parties jointly entitled with the claimant to any relief must be parties to the proceedings, and, subject to any order of the court made on an application for permission⁴, any of them who does not consent to being joined as a claimant must be made a defendant⁵.

In a claim in tort the proper claimant is the person who has been injured by the wrongdoer, or the person in whom a right to sue is vested or by whom it has since been acquired⁶.

In a claim for the recovery of land the proper claimant is the person in whom the legal estate is vested and who is entitled to possession of the land⁷.

In a claim where the claimant has only an equitable right in the thing demanded, he may be the proper claimant⁸, but the person having the legal right to demand the thing must in due course be made a party to the claim⁹. In proceedings concerning trust property the trustees usually are the proper claimants, for the legal title is in them¹⁰, but if a trustee refuses to bring a claim, the beneficiary who is interested in obtaining the relief may¹¹ bring the claim, making the trustee a defendant¹².

In a representative claim¹³, a person represented although not named in the proceedings is a party to the claim and may be added or substituted as the named claimant¹⁴.

1 See CPR 2.3(1); and PARA 18.

2 Clowes v Hilliard (1876) 4 ChD 413; Viola v Hickman (1912) 47 LJNC 257. As to a claim on behalf of a child see CPR Pt 21; PARA 222; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1409 et seq. As to a claim by a protected party see CPR Pt 21; PARA 222; and MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 634 et seq. As to claims by corporations see PARA 223; and CORPORATIONS vol 9(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 1286 et seq. As to claims by industrial and provident societies see FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS vol 50 (2008) PARA 2545. As to claims by trade unions see PARA 227; and EMPLOYMENT vol 40 (2009) PARA 846 et seq. As to persons in receipt of funding under the Access to Justice Act 1999 see LEGAL AID vol 65 (2008) PARAS 54 et seq, 131 et seq. As a rule objection to the right to bring a claim should be taken not at the trial but by application under CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq), but where want of capacity or authority to sue plainly appears at any stage, the court may order the claim to be struck out (John Shaw & Sons (Salford) Ltd v Shaw [1935] 2 KB 113, CA), and it may be bound to do so on its own initiative (see CPR 3.4; PARA 252; and Daimler Co Ltd v Continental Tyre and Rubber Co (Great Britain) Ltd [1916] 2 AC 307, HL; Lazard Bros & Co v Banque Industrielle de Moscou [1932] 1 KB 617, CA (affd sub nom Lazard Bros & Co v Midland Bank Ltd [1933] AC 289, HL)). Where the whole of the claimant's rights, title and interest in the subject matter of the action had passed to the Custodian of Enemy Property, the statement of claim was struck out: Maerkle v British and Continental Fur Co Ltd [1954] 3 All ER 50, [1954] 1 WLR 1242, CA. The same person cannot be both claimant and defendant.

3 All the members of an unincorporated members' club should, prima facie, join as claimants in a claim on a contract made on their behalf: see CLUBS vol 13 (2009) PARA 271; but cf PARA 227. As to representative actions see PARA 229 et seq. As to legal assignees of contracts bringing proceedings in their own names, and as to equitable assignees, see CHOSES IN ACTION vol 13 (2009) PARAS 68, 82. 48 (2007 Reissue) PARA 698; and see Re Pryce, Nevill v Pryce [1917] 1 Ch 234. A person may take an interest in land or other property, or the benefit of any condition or covenant respecting land or other property, even if he is not a party to the conveyance or other instrument: see the Law of Property Act 1925 s 56(1); and CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 617; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARA 61; SALE OF LAND vol 42 (Reissue) PARA 335. 4 Permission is sought by application under CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq) supported by evidence stating the grounds relied upon.

5 See CPR 19.3(1), (2); and PARA 211. This rule does not apply in probate proceedings: CPR 19.3(3).

6 As to loss caused by death see NEGLIGENCE vol 78 (2010) PARA 24 et seq. As to injuries to property, and as to tort generally, see TORT. The court has power to alter the capacity in which a party sues, and not only in claims in tort, if the new capacity is one which that party had at the commencement of the proceedings or has since acquired: see CPR Pt 17, CPR Pt 19; and PARAS 216, 607 et seq.

10 See generally TRUSTS. Where trustees are doubtful whether to bring the claim, they should apply to the court for directions under CPR Pt 64; otherwise they may not be allowed their costs out of the trust property: see Re Beddoe, Downes v Cottam [1893] 1 Ch 547, CA. In the case of settled land, the legal estate is normally in the tenant for life, who is the proper claimant: see SETTLEMENTS. Note however that since the commencement of the Trusts of Land and Appointment of Trustees Act 1996 on 1 January 1997, it has not been possible to create any new settlements under the Settled Land Act 1925 and except in the case of existing settlements, life interests now take effect behind a trust of land where the legal estate will generally be vested in trustees: see REAL PROPERTY vol 39(2) (Reissue) PARA 144.

11 On the other hand, it may be proper for the beneficiary to apply for the appointment of a receiver or, possibly, for permission to bring the proceedings in the name of the trustees: see TRUSTS vol 48 (2007 Reissue) PARA 1082; and see eg Fletcher v Fletcher (1844) 4 Hare 67 (liberty to sue in name of trustee); Hamp v Robinson (1865) 3 De GJ & Sm 97 (receiver). 209. Defendants generally.

A defendant is a person against whom a claim is made¹. Generally, a person cannot be a defendant unless the claimant claims some relief, even if only a declaration, against him².

The proper defendant in a claim on a contract is the person who made the promise for the breach of which the claim is brought, or the party who is liable upon the contract made by that person³ or to whom the liability under the contract has passed⁴.

The proper defendant in a claim in tort is the wrongdoer, or the person who is liable for the acts of the wrongdoer, or to whom the liability for the injury has passed⁵. If several persons jointly commit a tort, the claimant may sue any one or more of them⁶, but the court may order a person to be added as a new party if it is desirable to do so in order to resolve all the matters in dispute in the proceedings or if there is an issue involving the new party and an existing party concerning the matters in dispute and the addition of the new party is desirable in order to enable the court to resolve the issue⁷.

In a claim brought for the recovery of land, all the persons who are in possession should, in general, be joined as defendants⁸.

The proper defendant in proceedings brought to enforce an equitable right is the person against whom the relief claimed in the proceedings is sought⁹. In such proceedings all persons whose presence before the court is desirable in order to enable it to resolve all the matters in dispute should be made defendants¹⁰.

A claimant will not, generally, be compelled to add defendants: Norris v Beazley (1877) 2 CPD 80; Horwell v London General Omnibus Co Ltd (1877) 2 Ex D 365, CA; Sanders & Co v Peek (1884) 50 LT 630, DC; McCheane v Gyles (No 2) [1902] 1 Ch 911; Chalmers, Guthrie & Co Ltd v Guthrie (1923) 156 LT Jo 382. See, however, CPR 19.3(2); and PARAS 208, 211. The same person cannot be both defendant and claimant. As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

4 See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS vol 17(2) (Reissue) PARA 1511 et seq.

5 The court must decide the case as between the parties before it and, in order to succeed, the claimant must establish the liability of the defendant to him: Adams v Naylor [1946] AC 543, [1946] 2 All ER 241, HL; Royster v Cavey [1947] KB 204, [1946] 2 All ER 642, CA. As to insurers conducting the defence of proceedings in the name of the insured see INSURANCE vol 25 (2003 Reissue) PARA 199. Residents of member states now have the right to issue proceedings directly against the insurer of a person responsible for a motor accident in the United Kingdom: see the European Communities (Rights against Insurers) Regulations 2002, SI 2002/3061; and INSURANCE vol 25 (2003 Reissue) PARA 747.

(2) JOINDER OF PARTIES

210. In general.

Any number of claimants or defendants¹ may be joined as parties to a claim².

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(2) JOINDER OF PARTIES/211. Persons jointly entitled to a remedy.

211. Persons jointly entitled to a remedy.

Where a claimant¹ claims a remedy to which some other person is jointly entitled with him, all persons jointly entitled to the remedy must be parties unless the court² orders otherwise³. If any person does not agree to be a claimant, he must be made a defendant⁴, unless the court orders otherwise⁵. This provision does not apply in probate proceedings⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 19.3(1).

4 As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

5 CPR 19.3(2).

6 CPR 19.3(3). As to probate proceedings see CPR Pt 57; and EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(2) JOINDER OF PARTIES/212. Joinder of parties in the alternative.

212. Joinder of parties in the alternative.

Where there is reasonable doubt as to which of two or more persons is entitled to the relief or remedy claimed against the defendant, they may be joined as claimants and each may make his respective claim in the alternative, in which event the extra costs of adding the unsuccessful claimant may be ordered to be paid by the defendant, particularly where the doubt has been caused by the defendant. Similarly, where the claimant is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, he may join two or more defendants, so that the questions as to which, if any, of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all the parties¹.

Where a claim is properly and reasonably brought against two or more defendants² as being liable severally or in the alternative and judgment is recovered against one only, the unsuccessful defendant may be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the costs payable by him to the successful defendant³ or to pay the costs of the successful defendant direct to that defendant⁴. The court has a discretion whether or not to make such an order⁵.

A defendant to a claim for wrongful interference with goods may apply for a direction that another person be made a party to the claim to establish whether the other person has a better right to the goods than the claimant or has a claim which might render the defendant doubly liable under the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s 7: CPR 19.5A(2). The application notice must be served on all parties and on the person referred to above: CPR 19.5A(4). Where such person fails to attend the hearing of the application, or comply with any directions, the court may order that he is deprived of any claim against the defendant in respect of the goods: CPR 19.5A(3). The court may make an order subject to conditions: see CPR 3.1(3); and PARA 247.

² The circumstances must justify the joinder, in that they raise a doubt as to which of the defendants is liable (Henry and MacGregor Ltd v Marten and North of England Protection and Indemnity Association (1918) 34 TLR 504; The Theodoros, The Blidensol [1923] P 26; Anglo-Celtic Shipping Co Ltd v Elliott and Jeffery (1926) 42 TLR 297), but doubt or mistake by the claimant as to the law is not a good reason for joinder (Poulton v Moore (1913) 83 LJB 875, DC; revsd on other points [1915] 1 KB 400, CA). If there is no doubt or dilemma, the successful defendant will recover his costs against the claimant, who will not be able to recover those costs from the unsuccessful defendant: Salsbury v Woodland [1970] 1 QB 324, [1969] 3 All ER 863, CA. It is not necessary that the unsuccessful defendant should have blamed the successful defendant: Vine v National Motor Cab Co Ltd (1913) 29 TLR 311; Mulhern v National Motor Cab Co Ltd (1913) 29 TLR 677; Besterman v British Motor Cab Co Ltd [1914] 3 KB 181, CA. See also The Koursk [1924] P 140, CA. This practice applies also in Admiralty: see The WH Randall [1928] P 41, CA.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(3) CHANGE OF PARTIES/213. Change of parties; in general.

(3) CHANGE OF PARTIES

213. Change of parties; in general.

Except where a relevant limitation period has expired, when different provisions apply¹, the court² may order a person to be added as a new party if:

- 326 (1) it is desirable to add the new party so that the court can resolve all the matters in dispute in the proceedings³; or
- 327 (2) there is an issue involving the new party and an existing party which is connected to the matters in dispute in the proceedings, and it is desirable to add the new party so that the court can resolve that issue⁴.

The court may order any person to cease to be a party if it is not desirable for that person to be party to the proceedings⁵. The court may also order a new party to be substituted for an existing one if the existing party's interest or liability has passed to the new party⁶ and it is desirable to substitute the new party so that the court can resolve the matters in dispute in the proceedings⁷.

1 Where the case falls within CPR 19.5 (special provisions about changing parties after the end of a relevant limitation period): see PARA 215. 'Limitation period' means the period within which a person who has a right to claim against another person must start court proceedings to establish that right. The expiry of the period may be a defence to the claim: see CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 19.2(1), (2)(a). The word 'proceedings' in CPR Pt 19 should be given a broad interpretation encompassing all stages of a claim from the time it has been started until it becomes finally complete or moribund: C Inc plc v L [2001] 2 All ER (Comm) 446, [2001] All ER (D) 376 (Mar). The court has power to join a new party when judgment has already been obtained against the only existing party: C Inc plc v L [2001] 2 All ER (Comm) 446, [2001] All ER (D) 376 (Mar). However, CPR Pt 19 does not apply to public law proceedings: River Thames Society v First Secretary of State [2006] EWHC 2829 (Admin), [2006] All ER (D) 105 (Sep) (inherent jurisdiction of court used to substitute parties).

4 CPR 19.2(1), (2)(b). See Davies v Department of Trade and Industry [2006] EWCA Civ 1360, [2007] 1 All ER 518, [2007] 1 WLR 3232 (judge had exercised discretion not to join party correctly).

5 CPR 19.2(3). See Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Ltd v National Westminster Bank plc (2002) Times, 14 February.

6 CPR 19.2(4)(a).

7 CPR 19.2(4)(b). As to whether a named defendant who has made incorrect admissions of liability should be permitted to withdraw those admissions in order that the correct defendant be substituted see Sollitt v DJ Broady Ltd and TJ Broady Investments Ltd [2000] CPLR 259, CA. CPR 19.2(4) confers on the court the power to substitute a new party for an existing party or join a party to an action after a judgment has been given: Dunwoody Sports Marketing v Prescott [2007] EWCA Civ 461, [2007] 1 WLR 2343.

214. Procedure for adding and substituting parties.

The court's¹ permission is required to remove, add or substitute a party, except where the claim form has not been served². An application for such permission may be made by an existing party³ or a person who wishes to become a party⁴. An application for an order substituting a new party where an existing party's interest or liability has passed⁵ may be made without notice⁶ and must be supported by evidence⁷. No person may be added or substituted as a claimant⁸ unless he has given his consent in writing⁹ and that consent has been filed¹⁰ with the court¹¹. An order for the removal, addition or substitution of a party must be served on all parties to the proceedings¹² and any other person affected by the order¹³. When the court makes an order for the removal, addition or substitution of a party, it may give consequential directions about filing and serving the claim form on any new defendant¹⁴, serving relevant documents on the new party¹⁵ and the management of the proceedings¹⁶.

Where a party is joined to existing proceedings, the party joined is entitled to require the party joining him to supply, without charge, copies of all statements of case, written evidence and any documents appended or exhibited to them which have been served in the proceedings by or upon the joining party which relate to any issues between the joining party and the party joined, and copies of all orders made in those proceedings¹⁷. The documents must be supplied within 48 hours after a written request for them is received¹⁸.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 19.4(1). As to service of the claim form see PARA 120.

3 CPR 19.4(2)(a). Such an application must be made under the provisions of CPR Pt 23: see PARA 303 et seq.

4 CPR 19.4(2)(b); and see note 3. Parties may be removed, added or substituted in existing proceedings either on the court's own initiative or on the application of either an existing party or a person who wishes to become a party: Practice Direction--Addition and Substitution of Parties PD 19A para 1.1. The application may be dealt with without a hearing where all the existing parties and the proposed new party are in agreement: para 1.2. The application to add or substitute a new party must be supported by evidence setting out the proposed new party's interest in or connection with the claim and must be filed in accordance with CPR 23.3 (see PARA 306) and, unless the application is made CPR 19.2(4) (see PARA 213), be served in accordance with CPR 23.4 (see PARA 307): Practice Direction--Addition and Substitution of Parties PD 19A (2000) paras 1.3, 1.4. An order giving permission to amend will, unless the court orders otherwise, be drawn up. It will be served by the court unless the parties wish to serve it or the court orders them to do so: para 1.5.

8 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18. Where an application is made to the court to add or to substitute a new party to the proceedings as claimant, the party applying must file (1) the application notice; (2) the proposed amended claim form and particulars of claim; and (3) the signed, written consent of the new claimant to be so added or substituted: Practice Direction--Addition and Substitution of Parties PD 19A para 2.1. Where the court makes an order adding or substituting a party as claimant but the signed, written consent of the new claimant has not been filed, the order, and the addition or substitution of the new party as claimant, will not take effect until the signed, written consent of the new claimant is filed: para 2.2. Where the court has made an order adding or substituting a new claimant, the court may direct (a) a copy of the order to be served on every party to the proceedings and any other person affected by the order; (b) copies of the statements of case and of documents referred to in any statement of case to be served on the new party; (c) the party who made the application to file within 14 days an amended claim form and particulars of claim: para 2.3.

Where the court has made an order adding or substituting a defendant whether on its own initiative or on an application, the court may direct (1) the claimant to file with the court within 14 days (or as ordered) an amended claim form and particulars of claim for the court file; (2) a copy of the order to be served on all parties to the proceedings and any other person affected by it; (3) the amended claim form and particulars of claim, forms for admitting, defending and acknowledging the claim and copies of the statements of case and any other documents referred to in any statement of case to be served on the new defendant; (4) unless the court orders otherwise, the amended claim form and particulars of claim to be served on any other defendants: para 3.2. A new defendant does not become a party to the proceedings until the amended claim form has been served on him: para 3.3.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(3) CHANGE OF PARTIES/215. Adding or substituting parties after the end of a relevant limitation period.

215. Adding or substituting parties after the end of a relevant limitation period.

After the end of a period of limitation prescribed by statute¹, the court² may only add or substitute a party if the relevant limitation period was current when the proceedings were started³ and the addition or substitution is necessary⁴. It is provided that the addition or substitution of a party is necessary only if the court is satisfied that:

- 328 (1) the new party is to be substituted for a party who was named in the claim form in mistake for the new party⁵;
- 329 (2) the claim cannot properly be carried on by or against the original party unless the new party is added or substituted as claimant⁶ or defendant⁷; or
- 330 (3) the original party has died or had a bankruptcy order made against him and his interest or liability has passed to the new party⁸.

In addition, in a claim for personal injuries⁹ the court may add or substitute a party where it directs that certain specified provisions of the Limitation Act 1980¹⁰ are not to apply to the claim by or against the new party¹¹ or the issue of whether those provisions apply is to be determined at trial¹².

1 le a limitation period under (1) the Limitation Act 1980; (2) the Foreign Limitation Periods Act 1984; or (3) any other enactment which allows such a change, or under which such a change is allowed: CPR 19.5(1)(a)-(c). As to the meaning of 'limitation period' see PARA 213 note 1. CPR r 19.5(1)(c) applies to enactments which allow or which do not prohibit a change of parties after the end of a relevant limitation period: Parsons v George [2004] EWCA Civ 912, [2004] 3 All ER 633, [2004] 1 WLR 3264.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 19.5(2)(a).

4 CPR 19.5(2)(b). It is necessary to bear in mind the potential for injustice when the addition or substitution of a party under CPR 19.5(2), (3) deprives that party of a limitation defence: Martin v Kaisary [2005] EWCA Civ 594, [2006] PIQR P5.

5 CPR 19.5(3)(a). There is no reason to place a restrictive interpretation on the word 'mistake' for these purposes: see Re MMR and MR Vaccine Litigation (No 2), Roberts v Merck & Co Inc [2001] All ER (D) 320 (Feb); affd sub nom Horne-Roberts (A Child) v SmithKline Beecham plc [2001] EWCA Civ 2006, [2002] 1 WLR 1662. The overriding objective of doing justice is likely to be undermined if 'in mistake' is interpreted too restrictively: Morgan Est (Scotland) Ltd v Hanson Concrete Products Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 134, [2005] 3 All ER 135, [2005] 1 WLR 2557. The substitution is not permissible if the claim is thereby significantly altered: Weston v Gribben [2006] EWCA Civ 1425, [2006] All ER (D) 29 (Nov). See also Adelson v Associated Newspapers [2007] EWCA Civ 701, [2007] 4 All ER 330, [2008] 1 WLR 585; ABB Asea Brown Boveri Ltd v Hiscox Dedicated Corporate Member Ltd, ABB Asea Brown Boveri Ltd v Jardine Lloyd Thompson Ltd [2007] EWHC 1150 (Comm), [2007] All ER (D) 259 (May); Broadhurst v Broadhurst [2007] EWHC 726 (Ch), [2007] All ER (D) 522 (Mar); and LIMITATION PERIODS vol 68 (2008) PARA 944.

6 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

7 CPR 19.5(3)(b). As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

8 CPR 19.5(3)(c).

9 As to the meaning of 'claim for personal injuries' see PARA 19.

10 See the Limitation Act 1980 s 11 (special time limit for claims for personal injuries); or s 12 (special time limit for claims under fatal accidents legislation): see LIMITATION PERIODS vol 68 (2008) PARAS 998, 1000.

11 CPR 19.5(4)(a). This refers to the court's discretionary powers under the Limitation Act 1980 s 33 to exclude time limits in such claims in certain circumstances where certain criteria are met: see LIMITATION PERIODS vol 68 (2008) PARA 1001.

12 CPR 19.5(4)(b). See also CPR 17.4, which deals with other amendments after the end of a relevant limitation period; and PARA 216.

216. Misnomer.

Where a party has made a mistake as to the name of a party and a period of limitation prescribed by statute has expired¹, the court² may allow an amendment of the statement of case to correct the mistake, but only where the mistake was genuine and not one which would cause reasonable doubt as to the identity of the party in question³.

1 le a limitation period under (1) the Limitation Act 1980; (2) the Foreign Limitation Periods Act 1984; or (3) any other enactment which allows such an amendment, or under which such an amendment is allowed: CPR 17.4(1)(b)(i)-(iii). As to the meaning of 'limitation period' see PARA 213 note 1.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 17.4(1)(a), (3). See eg Gregson v Channel Four Television Corp [2000] All ER (D) 956, CA. If the mistakenly named party does not exist, little confusion will have ensued; however if the mistakenly named party does exist (and has even been served), then the mistaken party may be unable to rely upon this provision, but may seek to rely upon CPR 19.5: see PARA 215. See also Adelson v Associated Newspapers [2007] EWCA Civ 701, [2007] 4 All ER 330. As to the statement of case see PARA 584 et seq.

217. Addition of party for purposes of obtaining a costs order.

A person who is not a party to proceedings may nevertheless be liable for the costs of a successful party in those proceedings¹. In such circumstances, the person who is alleged to be liable for such costs must be made a party to enable him to defend the claim for costs against him².

218. Removal of party.

The court¹ may effectively remove a party when it exercises its powers to strike out² a statement of case³ if it appears:

- 331 (1) that the statement of case discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the claim⁴;
- 332 (2) that the statement of case is an abuse of the court's process or is otherwise likely to obstruct the just disposal of the proceedings⁵; or
- 333 (3) that there has been a failure to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 'Striking out' means the court ordering written material to be deleted so that it may no longer be relied upon: CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31.

3 In CPR 3.4, 3.5 (see PARAS 520, 521), reference to a statement of case includes reference to part of a statement of case: CPR 3.4(1). As to the meaning of 'statement of case' see PARA 584. As to the meaning of 'Part 20 claim' see PARA 618.

4 CPR 3.4(2)(a).

5 CPR 3.4(2)(b).

6 CPR 3.4(2)(c). CPR 3.4(2) does not limit any other power of the court to strike out a statement of case: CPR 3.4(5).

219. The Crown.

The Sovereign may sue a subject in her own courts, but under the common law no proceeding could be maintained against the Sovereign by a subject in those courts, for it is a maxim of English law that the king can do no wrong¹.

Under the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, the Crown² may sue and be sued by subjects in the appropriate courts³, subject to certain exceptions, in the same manner as that in which subjects may sue each other⁴. The Act does not apply to proceedings by or against Her Majesty in her private capacity⁵, nor to proceedings by or against the Crown otherwise than in respect of Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom⁶, and Her Majesty's prerogative powers are still preserved⁷. The Act does not affect proceedings on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench Division (now called proceedings in the Administrative Court)⁸. Proceedings by or against the Crown are to be instituted either in the name of or against an authorised government department or by or against the Attorney General⁹.

220. The Attorney General.

In certain proceedings the Attorney General¹ is a necessary party or has a right to be heard². Civil proceedings by or against the Crown are instituted either in his name or, more usually, that of the government department concerned³, and he may be joined as a defendant in any proceedings where the Crown's property rights are affected⁴. As representative of the Crown in its capacity of parens patriae, the Attorney General has concern for the proper administration of charities, and in proceedings relating to them he is usually a necessary party⁵. The instances in which the Attorney General is a necessary party to civil proceedings or has a right to be heard are numerous and diverse, for example he can bring proceedings to restrain vexatious proceedings⁶ and he must be made a respondent to any petition for a declaration of legitimacy or legitimation⁷. Other instances are considered elsewhere in this work⁸.

In the absence or incapacity of the Attorney General, his duties devolve upon the Solicitor General⁹.

221. Foreign and Commonwealth states.

Subject to extensive restrictions¹, a state² is immune from the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom courts³, and it is the duty of the court to give effect to this immunity even though the state does not appear in the proceedings in question⁴. A state is not immune as respects proceedings in respect of which it has submitted to the jurisdiction of the court⁵. A foreign state may sue in the United Kingdom⁶, and if it does so it will be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction⁷.

1 See the State Immunity Act 1978 ss 2-11, which provide extensive exceptions from state immunity. In effect these sections considerably restrict the immunity from suit which was formerly enjoyed by foreign states and their organs, including their commercial and banking activities, although these immunities were already being severely curtailed by developing rules of common law: see eg The Philippine Admiral [1977] AC 373, [1976] 1 All ER 78, PC; Trendtex Trading Corp v Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] QB 529, [1977] 1 All ER 881, CA; The Playa Larga (Owners of Cargo lately laden on board) v I Congreso del Partido (Owners) [1983] 1 AC 244, [1981] 2 All ER 1064, HL. The exceptions from immunity relate to proceedings in respect of which the state has submitted to the jurisdiction (State Immunity Act 1978 s 2), and proceedings with a United Kingdom flavour relating to commercial transactions (s 3), contracts of employment (s 4 (amended by the British Nationality Act 1981 s 52(6), Sch 7; by virtue of the British Overseas Territories Act 2002 s 2(3); and by SI 1986/948)), death, personal injuries or damage to property (State Immunity Act 1978 s 5), the ownership, possession or use of property (s 6), patents and other intellectual property (s 7), membership of corporate bodies (s 8), arbitrations (other than arbitrations between states) (s 9), ships (including hovercraft) used for commercial purposes (ss 10, 17(1)), or value added tax, customs and excise duties, agricultural levies or rates for commercial property (s 11).

2 The immunities and privileges conferred the State Immunity Act 1978 Pt I (ss 1-17), apply to any foreign or Commonwealth state other than the United Kingdom: s 14(1). References to a state include references to (1) the sovereign or other head of that state in his public capacity (s 14(1)(a)); (2) the government of that state (s 14(1)(b)); and (3) any department of that government (s 14(1)(c)); but not to any entity (called a 'separate entity') which is distinct from the executive organs of the government of the state and capable of suing or being sued (s 14(1)). 'United Kingdom' means Great Britain and Northern Ireland: see the Interpretation Act 1978 s 5, Sch 1; and STATUTES vol 44(1) (Reissue) PARA 1383. 'Great Britain' means England, Wales and Scotland: see the Union with Scotland Act 1706, preamble, art I; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS. Neither the Channel Islands nor the Isle of Man is within the United Kingdom.

3 State Immunity Act 1978 s 1(1). A separate entity (see note 2) is immune from the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom courts if, and only if, (1) the proceedings relate to anything done by it in the exercise of sovereign authority (s 14(2)(a)); and (2) the circumstances are such that the state (or, in the case of proceedings to which s 10 (see note 1) applies, a state which is not a party to the Brussels Convention) would have been so immune (s 14(2)(b)). 'Brussels Convention' means the International Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules concerning the Immunity of State-owned Ships (Brussels, 10 April 1926; TS 15 (1980); Cmnd 7800): State Immunity Act 1978 s 17(1). Immunities and privileges are also enjoyed by other persons or bodies similar to those enjoyed by foreign states eg under the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 265 et seq), which applies to a sovereign or other head of state, members of the family forming part of his household and his private servants as it applies to the head of a diplomatic mission, members of his family forming part of his household and his private servants (State Immunity Act 1978 s 20(1)). See also eg the International Organisations Act 1968 ss 1, 2, 6, Sch 1; the Consular Relations Act 1968 (consular officers); and see generally INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW.

4 State Immunity Act 1978 s 1(2). Certain procedural privileges are accorded to states: see eg s 12 (service of process and default judgments) and s 13 (restrictions on enforcement proceedings).

5 See the State Immunity Act 1978 s 2(1). Such submission may take place after the dispute giving rise to the proceedings or by a prior written agreement, although not if the agreement merely provides that it is to be governed by the law of the United Kingdom: see s 2(2).

6 See Emperor of Austria v Kossuth and Day (1861) 2 Giff 628 (affd with variation (1861) 3 De GF & J 217); United States of America v Wagner (1867) 2 Ch App 582, CA; Republic of Peru v Peruvian Guano Co (1887) 36 ChD 489.

7 State Immunity Act 1978 s 2(3)(a). Subject to exceptions, it will also be deemed to have submitted if it intervenes or takes any step in the proceedings: see s 2(3)(b). The submission will extend to any appeal, but not to any counterclaim unless it arises out of the same legal relationship or facts as the claim: s 2(6). The head of a state's diplomatic mission in the United Kingdom, or the person for the time being performing his functions, is deemed to have authority to submit on behalf of the state in respect of any proceedings; and any person who has entered into a contract on behalf of and with the authority of a state is deemed to have authority to submit on its behalf in respect of proceedings arising out of the contract: s 2(7).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(4) PARTICULAR PARTIES/222. Children and protected parties.

222. Children and protected parties.

A protected party¹ must have a litigation friend to conduct proceedings on his behalf². A child³ must have a litigation friend to conduct proceedings on his behalf unless the court⁴ makes an order permitting the child to conduct proceedings without a litigation friend⁵. An application for such an order may be made by the child⁶. If the child already has a litigation friend, the application must be made on notice to the litigation friend⁷; if the child has no litigation friend, the application may be made without notice⁸. Where the court has made such an order and it subsequently appears to the court that it is desirable for a litigation friend to conduct the proceedings on behalf of the child, the court may appoint a person to be the child's litigation friend⁹.

1 'Protected party' means a party, or intended party, who lacks capacity, within the meaning of the Mental Capacity Act 2005 (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 402), to conduct the proceedings: CPR 2.3(1), 21.1(2)(a), (c), (d). A party cannot be a protected party until proceedings have commenced: Bailey (by his litigation friend Ashton) v Warren [2006] EWCA Civ 51, [2006] WTLR 753.

2 CPR 21.2(1). As to litigation friends see further CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1411 et seq. Where a protected party regains or acquires capacity to conduct the proceedings, the litigation friend's appointment continues until it is ended by court order: see CPR 21.9(2).

3 'Child' means a person under 18: CPR 2.3(1), 21.1(2)(b). When a child who is not a protected party reaches the age of 18, a litigation friend's appointment ceases: see CPR 21.9(1).

223. Corporations.

A corporation, whether incorporated by charter, statute or registration¹, or a company, whether incorporated by special statute or registered under the Companies Acts², must sue and be sued in its corporate title or registered name, as the case may be³. A corporation which has ceased to have any juristic existence cannot sue⁴ or be sued⁵.

The liquidator of a company in liquidation may sue in the name of the company⁶. On the other hand, a claim or proceeding cannot be commenced or continued against a company in respect of which a winding-up order has been made except with the leave of the Companies Court⁷.

As to derivative claims see PARA 232.

A company may act by an authorised officer and may be represented at hearings and trial by an authorised representative, such as a director or employee, with the permission of the court: see CPR 39.6; Practice Direction--Miscellaneous Provisions Relating to Hearings PD 39A paras 5.2.-5.5; and PARA 1126.

If a limited company which is a party changes its name, notice of the change must be filed at the Action Department of the Central Office or at the appropriate district registry and served on all other parties, and the new name must thereafter be substituted in the title of the proceedings, the old name being mentioned in brackets; however, where a company is required to re-register as a public limited company or the Welsh equivalent it is sufficient to substitute the new name at the next hearing in the claim after re-registration. As to re-registration see COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 168 et seq.

224. Partnerships and firms.

Provision for procedures to be followed when claims are brought by or against a partnership within the jurisdiction is made by a practice direction¹. They apply where claims are brought by or against two or more persons who were partners² and carried on that partnership business within the jurisdiction, at the time when the cause of action accrued³. Where that partnership has a name, unless it is inappropriate to do so, claims must be brought in or against the name under which that partnership carried on business at the time the cause of action accrued⁴. If the partners are requested to provide a copy of a partnership membership statement⁵ by any party to a claim, the partners must do so within 14 days of receipt of the request⁶. In that request the party seeking a copy of a partnership membership statement must specify the date when the relevant cause of action accrued⁷.

Where a claim is brought against an individual who carries on a business within the jurisdiction (but need not himself be within the jurisdiction); and that business is carried on in a name other than his own name (the 'business name'), the claim may be brought against the business name as if it were the name of a partnership⁸.

² For these purposes, 'partners' includes persons claiming to be entitled as partners and persons alleged to be partners: Practice Direction--How to Start Proceedings: The Claim Form PD 7A para 5A.2.

225. Trustees and personal representatives.

A claim may be brought by or against trustees, executors or administrators in that capacity without adding as parties any persons who have a beneficial interest in the trust or estate (the 'beneficiaries')¹. Any judgment or order given or made in the claim is binding on the beneficiaries unless the court orders otherwise in the same or other proceedings².

226. Trustees in bankruptcy.

A trustee of a bankrupt may sue and be sued in his official title as 'The Trustee of the property of A B, a Bankrupt'¹.

227. Trade unions, employers' associations and other unincorporated associations.

A trade union¹ which is not a special register body² is not and must not be treated as if it were a body corporate, but it may sue and be sued, just as an unincorporated employers' association³ may sue and be sued, in its own name, whether in proceedings relating to property or founded on contract or tort or any other cause of action⁴.

An unincorporated members' club, not being a partnership or legal entity, cannot sue or be sued in the club name, nor can the secretary or any other officer of such a club sue or be sued on behalf of the club, even if the rules purport to give him power to sue and provide for his being sued, unless this is permitted by statute⁵. The trustees may, however, sue or be sued in respect of club property vested in them and are, in any proceedings in regard to the property, considered to represent the members beneficially interested therein⁶.

4 See the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 s 10 (trade unions), s 127 (unincorporated employers' association). In each case this is expressed to be subject to immunity in certain actions in tort: see ss 11, 128; and EMPLOYMENT vol 40 (2009) PARAS 853, 1030. In English law an unincorporated body is not a legal entity, and save as specifically provided (eg in the case of partners carrying on business within the jurisdiction under a firm name: see PARA 224), it cannot sue or be sued in its own name: see Bloom v National Federation of Discharged and Demobilised Sailors and Soldiers (1918) 35 TLR 50, CA. (5) REPRESENTATIVE PARTIES

229. Representative parties with same interest.

Where more than one person has the same interest in a claim, the claim may be begun (or the court¹ may order that the claim be continued) by or against one or more of the persons who have the same interest, as representatives of any other persons who have that interest². The court may also direct that a person may not act as a representative³. Unless the court otherwise directs, any judgment or order given in a claim in which a party is acting as a representative under this rule is binding on all persons represented in the claim⁴ but may only be enforced by or against a person who is not a party to the claim with the permission of the court⁵. Different provisions apply to a claim where representation of persons or parties who cannot be ascertained is necessary⁶.

See eg Russell-Cooke Trust Co v Elliott [2001] All ER (D) 300 (Mar), where an issue arose as to whether an investment scheme comprised a single, communal investment plan or a number of discrete plans and trusts; the third defendant was joined in the proceedings as the representative party of those investors who contended that the scheme had created one collective investment plan, and the fourth defendant was joined as the representative of those investors who contended that the scheme had created as many independent plans as there were loans made. 230. Representation of interested persons who cannot be ascertained.

- 334 (1) the estate of a deceased person¹;
- 335 (2) property subject to a trust²; or
- 336 (3) the meaning of a document, including a statute³, the court⁴ may make an order appointing a person to represent any other person or persons in the claim where the person or persons to be represented:

- 337 (a) are unborn⁵;
- 338 (b) cannot be found⁶;
- 339 (c) cannot easily be ascertained⁷; or
- 340 (d) are a class of persons who have the same interest in a claim and either one or more members of that class are within the categories set out in heads (a) to (c) above⁸, or to appoint a representative would further the overriding objective⁹.

An application for such an order may be made by any person who seeks to be appointed under the order¹⁰, or by any party to the claim¹¹, and may be made at any time before or after the claim has started¹².

The court's approval is required to settle a claim in which a party is acting as a representative under this rule¹³ and the court may approve a settlement where it is satisfied that the settlement is for the benefit of all the represented persons¹⁴.

Unless the court otherwise directs, any judgment or order given in a claim in which a party is acting as a representative under this rule is binding on all persons represented in the claim¹⁵ but may only be enforced by or against a person who is not a party to the claim with the permission of the court¹⁶.

231. Power to make judgments binding on non-parties.

The High Court may at any time direct that notice of any claim¹, or of any judgment or order given in the claim, relating to the estate of a deceased person or to property subject to a trust or the sale of any property be served on any person who is not a party but who is or may be affected by it². An application under this rule may be made without notice and must be supported by written evidence which includes the reasons why the person to be served should be bound by the judgment in the claim³. If a person served with notice of a claim files an acknowledgment of service within 14 days he will become a party to the claim⁴ and if he does not acknowledge service of the notice he will be bound by any judgment given in the claim as if he were a party⁵. Any person served with a notice of a judgment or order under this rule will be bound by the judgment or order as if he had been a party to the claim⁶ but may, provided he acknowledges service, within 28 days after the notice is served on him, apply to the court to set aside or vary the judgment or order and take part in any proceedings relating to the judgment or order⁷.

If, after service of the notice of the claim on a person, the claim form is amended so as substantially to alter the remedy claimed, the court may direct that a judgment is not to bind that person unless a further notice, together with a copy of the amended claim form, is served on him⁸.

1 Unless the court orders otherwise, a notice of a claim or of a judgment or order under this rule must be (1) in the form required by the relevant practice direction; (2) issued by the court; and (3) accompanied by a form of acknowledgment of service with any necessary modifications: CPR 19.8A(4)(a). A notice of a claim must also be accompanied by a copy of the claim form and such other statements of case, witness statements or affidavits as the court may direct: CPR 19.8A(4)(b). A notice of a judgment or order must also be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order: CPR 19.8A(4)(c). A notice is issued on the date entered on the notice by the court: CPR 19.8A(10). Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(6) DERIVATIVE CLAIMS/232. Derivative claims.

(6) DERIVATIVE CLAIMS

Where a company, other body corporate or trade union is alleged to be entitled to claim a remedy, and a claim is made by a member of it for it to be given that remedy¹, it is termed a 'derivative claim'². A derivative claim must be started by a claim form³. The company, body corporate or trade union for the benefit of which a remedy is sought must be made a defendant⁴ to the claim⁵. After the issue of the claim form, the claimant⁶ must not take any further step in the proceedings without the permission of the court⁷, other than certain specified steps⁸ or making an urgent application for interim relief⁹.

When the claim form for a derivative claim under Chapter 1 of Part 11 of the Companies Act 2006 is issued, the claimant must file an application notice¹⁰ for permission to continue the claim and the written evidence on which the claimant relies in support of the permission application¹¹. The claimant must not make the company a respondent to the permission application¹². The claimant must notify the company of the claim and permission application by sending to the company as soon as reasonably practicable after the claim form is issued (1) a notice in the form set out in the relevant practice direction¹³, and to which is attached a copy of the provisions of the Companies Act 2006 required by that form; (2) copies of the claim form and the particulars of claim; (3) the application notice; and (4) a copy of the evidence filed by the claimant in support of the permission application¹⁴. The claimant must file a witness statement confirming that the claimant has notified the company in accordance with the above requirements¹⁵.

Where notifying the company of the permission application would be likely to frustrate some party of the remedy sought, the court may, on application by the claimant, order that the company need not be notified for such period after the issue of the claim form as the court directs¹⁶. Such an application may be made without notice¹⁷.

Where the court dismisses the claimant's permission application without a hearing, the court will notify the claimant and (unless the court orders otherwise) the company of that decision¹⁸. The claimant may ask for an oral hearing to reconsider the decision to dismiss the permission application, but the claimant must make the request to the court in writing within seven days of being notified of the decision and must notify the company in writing, as soon as reasonably practicable, of that request unless the court orders otherwise¹⁹. Where the court dismisses the permission application at a hearing, it will notify the claimant and the company of its decision²⁰. Where the court does not dismiss the application for permission to continue the derivative action²¹, the court will order that the company and any other appropriate party must be made respondents to the permission application²² and give directions for the service on the company and any other appropriate party of the application notice and the claim form²³.

Slightly different rules apply where (a) either a body corporate to which Chapter 1 of Part 11 of the Companies Act 2006 does not apply or a trade union is alleged to be entitled to a remedy²⁴; and (b) either a claim is made by a member for it to be given that remedy²⁵ or a member of the body corporate or trade union seeks to take over a claim already started by the body corporate or trade union or one or more of its members, for it to be given that remedy²⁶. The member who starts, or seeks to take over, the claim must apply to the court for permission to continue the claim²⁷. The application for permission must be made by an application notice²⁸, and the procedure for an application to continue a derivative claim in relation to a company²⁹ applies to the permission application as if the body corporate or trade union were a company³⁰.

If a derivative claim (except in pursuance of an order made on a claim by members in respect of unfair prejudice³¹) arises in the course of other proceedings, the procedure differs according to the nature of the claim³².

The court may order the company, body corporate or trade union for the benefit of which a derivative claim is brought to indemnify the claimant against liability for costs incurred in the permission application or in the derivative claim or both³³.

Where the court has given permission to continue a derivative claim, the court may order that the claim may not be discontinued, settled or compromised without the permission of the court³⁴.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(7) GROUP LITIGATION/233. Group litigation orders.

(7) GROUP LITIGATION

233. Group litigation orders.

The court¹ may make a group litigation order² (a 'GLO') where there are or are likely to be a number of claims giving rise to common or related issues of fact or law (the 'GLO issues')³. Applications⁴ for a GLO may only be made to certain judges⁵, but the court may make a GLO of its own initiative⁶. In either event a GLO may only be made with the consent of the Lord Chief Justice, if it is to proceed in the Queen's Bench Division, of the Chancellor of the High Court, if it is to proceed in the Chancery Division, or of the Head of Civil Justice, if it is to proceed in a county court⁷.

A GLO must:

- 341 (1) contain directions about the establishment of a register (the 'group register') on which the claims managed under the GLO will be entered⁸;
- 342 (2) specify the GLO issues which will identify the claims to be managed as a group under the GLO⁹; and
- 343 (3) specify a court as the 'management court', which will manage the claims on the group register¹⁰.

A GLO may:

- 344 (a) in relation to claims which raise one or more of the GLO issues direct their transfer to the management court, order their stay¹¹ until further order and direct their entry on the group register¹²;
- 345 (b) direct that from a specified date claims which raise one or more of the GLO issues should be started in the management court and entered on the group register¹³; and
- 346 (c) give directions for publicising the GLO¹⁴.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 A Group Litigation Order ('GLO') means an order made under CPR 19.11 to provide for the case management of claims which give rise to common or related issues of fact or law (the 'GLO issues'); CPR 19.10. As to the effect of a GLO see PARA 234; and as to case management generally see PARA 246 et seq.

3 CPR 19.11(1). Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B deals with group litigation where the multiple parties are claimants. In a case where the multiple parties are defendants, the court will give such directions as are appropriate: para 1.

4 Before applying for a GLO the solicitor acting for the proposed applicant should consult the Law Society's Multi Party Action Information Service in order to obtain information about other cases giving rise to the proposed GLO issues: Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 2.1. It will often be convenient for the claimants' solicitors to form a Solicitors' Group and to choose one of their number to take the lead in applying for the GLO and in litigating the GLO issues: see para 2.2. The lead solicitor's role and relationship with the other members of the Solicitors' Group should be carefully defined in writing and will be subject to any directions given by the court under CPR 19.13(c) (see PARA 234 note 2 head (3)): Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 2.2. In considering whether to apply for a GLO, the applicant should consider whether any other order would be more appropriate, in particular whether, in the circumstances of the case, it would be more appropriate for the claims to be consolidated or for the rules relating to representative parties to be used: see para 2.3.

5 See Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B paras 3.5-3.9. Applications to the High Court must be made, in London, to the Senior Master in the Queen's Bench Division, the Chief Chancery Master or the senior judge of the relevant specialist list, and outside London to a presiding judge or a Chancery supervising judge of the circuit in which the district registry which has issued the application notice is situated: paras 3.5, 3.6. In a county court the application should be made to the designated civil judge for the area in which the county court which has issued the application notice is situated: para 3.7. An application for a GLO must be made in accordance with CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq), may be made at any time before or after any relevant claims have been issued and may be made either by a claimant or by a defendant: Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 3.1. As to the contents of the application see para 3.2. As to the meanings of 'claimant' and 'defendant' see PARA 18.

6 See Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 4. As to the procedure that applies when a court proposes to make an order of its own initiative see CPR 3.3; and PARA 251.

7 See Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 3.3. The court to which the application for a GLO is made will, if minded to make the GLO, send to the Lord Chief Justice, the Chancellor, or the Head of Civil Justice, as appropriate, a copy of the application notice, a copy of any relevant written evidence, and a written statement as to why a GLO is considered to be desirable. These steps may be taken either before or after a hearing of the application: para 3.4. As to the Head of Civil Justice see PARA 12 note 5.

8 CPR 19.11(2)(a). Once a GLO has been made a group register will be established on which will be entered such details as the management court may direct of the cases which are to be subject to the GLO: Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B paras 6.1, 6.7. A claim must be issued before it can be entered on a group register: para 6.1A. An application for details of a case to be entered on a group register may be made by any party to the case, but an order for details to be so entered will not be made unless the case gives rise to at least one of the GLO issues: see paras 6.2, 6.3. The court, if it is not satisfied that a case can be conveniently case managed with the other cases on the group register, or if it is satisfied that the entry of the case on the group register would adversely affect the case management of the other cases, may refuse to allow details of the case to be entered on the group register, or order their removal from the register if already entered, although the case gives rise to one or more of the group issues: para 6.4. The group register will normally be maintained by and kept at the court but the court may direct this to be done by the solicitor for one of the parties to a case entered on the register: para 6.5. CPR 5.4 (supply of documents from court records: see PARA 82) applies where the register is maintained by the court. A party to a claim on the group register may request documents relating to any other claim on the group register in accordance with CPR 5.4(1) as if he were a party to those proceedings: Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 6.6(1). Where the register is maintained by a solicitor, any person may inspect the group register during normal business hours and upon giving reasonable notice to the solicitor; the solicitor may charge a fee not exceeding the fee prescribed for a search at the court office: para 6.6(2).

A party to a claim entered on the group register may apply to the management court for the claim to be removed from the register (CPR 19.14(1)), and if the court orders the claim to be removed it may give directions about the future management of the claim (CPR 19.14(2)).

10 CPR 19.11(2)(c).

11 A 'stay' imposes a halt on proceedings, apart from taking any steps allowed by the Civil Procedure Rules or the terms of the stay. Proceedings can be continued if a stay is lifted: CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31.

12 CPR 19.11(3)(a).

13 CPR 19.11(3)(b).

14 CPR 19.11(3)(c). Note that this is an opt-in system rather than an opt-out system.

After a GLO has been made, a copy of the GLO should be supplied (1) to the Law Society, 113 Chancery Lane, London WC2A 1PL; and (2) to the Senior Master, Queen's Bench Division, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London WC2A 2LL: Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B para 11.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/8. PARTIES/(7) GROUP LITIGATION/234. Effect of the GLO.

234. Effect of the GLO.

The effect of a GLO is to make all claimants or defendants, who are on the group register¹, parties to the claims which are subject to the GLO, so that they are managed by the court as one claim so long as it just and convenient for them to be so managed and dealt with². Where a judgment or order is given or made in a claim on the group register in relation to one or more GLO issues³:

- 347 (1) that judgment or order is binding on the parties to all other claims that are on the group register at the time the judgment is given or the order is made unless the court⁴ orders otherwise⁵; and
- 348 (2) the court may give directions as to the extent to which that judgment or order is binding on the parties to any claim which is subsequently entered on the group register⁶.

A party to a claim which was entered on the group register after a judgment or order which is binding on him was given or made may not apply for the judgment or order to be set aside⁷, varied or stayed⁸ or appeal the judgment or order, but may apply to the court for an order that the judgment or order is not binding on him⁹. However, any other party who is adversely affected by a judgment or order which is binding on him may seek permission to appeal the order¹⁰.

1 As to the group register see PARA 233 note 8. As to the meaning of 'GLO' see PARA 233 note 2; and as to the meanings of 'claimant' and 'defendant' see PARA 18.

2 Directions that may be given by the management court include directions (1) varying the GLO issues; (2) providing for one or more claims on the group register to proceed as test claims (see PARA 235); (3) appointing the solicitor of one or more parties to be the lead solicitor for the claimants or defendants; (4) specifying the details to be included in a statement of case in order to show that the criteria for entry of the claim on the group register have been met; (5) specifying a date after which no claim may be added to the group register unless the court gives permission; and (6) for the entry of any particular claim which meets one or more of the GLO issues on the group register: see CPR 19.13; and see further Practice Direction--Group Litigation PD 19B paras 7-16. As to case management generally see PARA 246 et seq. In litigation on behalf of persons under disability, where some claimants propose to discontinue the claim, the court's permission is not required if discontinuance does not amount to a settlement and the claim form does not name another claimant: Sayers v Smithkline Beecham plc (2004) Times, 22 October.

As to subjecting claims outside the GLO to the same management directions see Taylor v Nugent Care Society [2004] EWCA Civ 51, [2004] 3 All ER 671.

3 As to the meaning of 'GLO issues' see PARA 233 note 2. Unless the court orders otherwise, disclosure of any document relating to the GLO issues by a party to a claim on the group register is disclosure of that document to all parties to claims on the group register and which are subsequently entered on the group register: CPR 19.12(4). As to disclosure generally see PARA 538 et seq.

235. Test claims.

Directions given by the management court¹ may include directions providing for one or more claims on the group register² to proceed as test claims³. Where a direction has been given for a claim on the group register to proceed as a test claim and that claim is settled, the management court may order that another claim on the group register be substituted as the test claim⁴. Where such an order is made, any order made in the test claim before the date of substitution is binding on the substituted claim unless the court orders otherwise⁵.

(8) RELATOR ACTIONS

236. Relator actions generally.

A relator action is one brought to restrain interference with a public right, whether committed or threatened, or to compel the performance of a public duty or to abate a public nuisance, and in such an action the Attorney General is a necessary party¹. The action is brought in the name of the Attorney General at the relation of the person or body seeking to prevent the commission or continuation of the public wrong². Although he is the nominal claimant³, the Attorney General is not deemed to be party to the proceedings, so as to be liable for costs, but the relator is liable for costs⁴.

The Attorney General is a necessary party in a relator action because he is the person recognised by public law as entitled to represent the public in a court of justice and he alone can maintain a suit ex officio or ex relatione for a declaration as to public rights⁵. In this respect his jurisdiction is absolute⁶ and the court has no power to review his decision⁷.

Any person may act as relator in the proceedings, and the absence of any interest in or injury to the relator affords no answer to them⁸. The right of action of the Attorney General does not depend on the presence of a relator. On receiving information of the infringement of any public right he may proceed *ex officio*⁹.

Relator actions are now rare in practice.

The rights for the protection of which the Attorney General intervenes must be the rights of the community in general, and not the rights of a limited portion of the community, especially when the limited portion in question has representatives who can bring the action: A-G and Spalding RDC v Garner [1907] 2 KB 480. See NUISANCE vol 78 (2010) PARA 190.

2 Before the action is brought, the leave of the Attorney General must first be obtained, and for this purpose application is made to the Law Officers' Department, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London WC2A 2LL. The relator must leave at the department a copy of the proposed claim form and statement of case with a certificate of counsel annexed to it stating that they are proper for the allowance of the Attorney General, and a copy of the claim form and statement of case which, if the action is sanctioned by the Attorney General, will be signed by him and returned to the relator's solicitor, who must himself leave a certificate that the claimant is a proper person or body to be relator and is capable of satisfying any order for costs of the action.

3 The action is entitled 'The Attorney General at the relation of X Y'. The relator is not joined unless he has a separate cause of action arising out of the same facts or there are special circumstances (A-G v Barker (1900) 83 LT 245), but if the claims by the Attorney General and by the relator are inconsistent with one another, they cannot be joined (A-G v Earl of Durham (1882) 46 LT 16).

The fact that the Attorney General has determined to institute proceedings ex officio or ex relatione does not affect the court's discretion as to the granting of the relief claimed: see A-G v Harris[1960] 1 QB 31, [1959] 2 All ER 393 (revsd but not on this point [1961] 1 QB 74, [1960] 3 All ER 207, CA), applying A-G v Birmingham, Tame and Rea District Drainage Board[1910] 1 Ch 48, CA; A-G (on the relation of Hornchurch UDC) v Bastow[1957] 1 QB 514, [1957] 1 All ER 497. Thus, a right may be enforced by injunction in proceedings by the Attorney General ex officio even when the right was conferred by a statute which prescribed remedies for its infringement: A-G (on the relation of Hornchurch UDC) v Bastow [1957] 1 QB 514, [1957] 1 All ER 497.

9 A-G v Cockermouth Local Board(1874) LR 18 Eq 172; A-G v Logan[1891] 2 QB 100, DC. There is no difference between a proceeding brought ex officio by the Attorney General and a proceeding by him at the relation of a third person, except as to costs. If there is no relator the Attorney General is responsible for the costs, as opposed to the relator in a relator action: A-G v Cockermouth Local Board(1874) LR 18 Eq 172.

237. Exceptions to relator actions.

The Attorney General is not a necessary party nor is his leave required to bring an action at his relation to enforce the performance of a public duty or to restrain the interference with a public right in the following circumstances:

- 349 (1) where the interference with the public right is at the same time an interference with some private right¹ or is a breach of some statutory provision for the protection of the claimant²;
- 350 (2) where the special damage suffered by the claimant is over and above that suffered by the general public, even though there is no interference with any special private right³;
- 351 (3) where a local authority considers the bringing of the action to be expedient for the promotion or protection of the interests of the inhabitants of its area⁴.

In LCC v South Metropolitan Gas Co [1904] 1 Ch 76, CA, the plaintiffs (claimants) were held to be entitled without joining the Attorney General to sue for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with matters the control and management of which was vested by statute in the plaintiffs.

(9) DEATH OF A PARTY

238. Death of a person with an interest in a claim.

Where a person who had an interest in a claim has died and that person has no personal representative the court¹ may order²:

- 352 (1) the claim to proceed in the absence of a person representing the estate of the deceased³; or
- 353 (2) a person to be appointed to represent the estate of the deceased⁴.

Where an order has been made under head (2) above, any judgment or order made or given in the claim is binding on the estate of the deceased⁵.

239. Death of defendant.

Where a defendant¹ against whom a claim could have been brought has died and a grant of probate or administration has been made, the claim must be brought against the persons who are the personal representatives of the deceased². Where, however, such a grant has not been made, the claim must be brought against 'the estate of' the deceased³ and the claimant⁴ must apply to the court for an order⁵ appointing a person to represent the estate of the deceased in the claim⁶.

Where such an order has been made any judgment or order made or given in the claim is binding on the estate of the deceased⁷.

1 As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

3 CPR 19.8(2)(b)(i). A claim is treated as having been brought against 'the estate of' the deceased in accordance with CPR 19.8(2)(b)(i) where (1) the claim is brought against the 'personal representatives' of the deceased but a grant of probate or administration has not been made; or (2) the person against whom the claim was brought was dead when the claim was started: CPR 19.8(3).

4 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

(10) CHANGE OF SOLICITOR

240. Solicitor acting for a party.

Where the address for service of a party is the business address of that party's solicitor¹, the solicitor will be considered to be acting for that party until the provisions of Part 42 of the Civil Procedure Rules² have been complied with³.

A solicitor appointed to represent a party only as an advocate at a hearing will not be considered to be acting for that party within the meaning of Part 42 of the rules⁴.

241. Duty to give notice of change of solicitor.

Where:

- 354 (1) a party for whom a solicitor is acting¹ wants to change his solicitor;
- 355 (2) a party, after having conducted the claim in person, appoints a solicitor to act on his behalf²; or
- 356 (3) a party, after having conducted the claim by a solicitor, intends to act in person, the party or his solicitor (where one is acting) must file³ notice⁴ of the change and serve notice of the change on every other party⁵. Where head (1) or head (3) above applies, such notice must also be served on the former solicitor⁶. The notice must state the party's new address for service⁷ and the notice filed at court⁸ must state that notice has been served on the other parties and on the former solicitor as required⁹.

Subject as follows, where a party has changed his solicitor or intends to act in person, the former solicitor will be considered to be the party's solicitor unless and until either notice is filed and served in accordance with the above provisions or the court makes an order¹⁰ that that solicitor has ceased to act and the order is served as required by the relevant rule¹¹.

Where the certificate¹² of a LSC funded client or an assisted person is revoked or discharged the solicitor who acted for that person will cease to be the solicitor acting in the case as soon as his retainer is determined under the relevant regulations¹³. If that person wishes to continue, then where he appoints a solicitor to act on his behalf, he must file and serve notice of the change¹⁴ as if he had previously conducted the claim in person¹⁵ and where he wants to act in person, he must give an address for service¹⁶.

8 The notice must not be filed until every other party has been served: see Practice Direction--Change of Solicitor PD 42 para 1.2. The notice must be filed in the court office in which the claim is proceeding: para 2.5. 242. Order that a solicitor has ceased to act.

A solicitor may apply for an order declaring that he has ceased to be the solicitor acting for a party¹. Where such an application is made, notice of the application must be given to the party for whom the solicitor is acting, unless the court² directs otherwise, and the application must be supported by evidence³.

Where the court makes an order that a solicitor has ceased to act, a copy of the order must be served on every party to the proceedings and if it is served by a party or the solicitor, the party or the solicitor (as the case may be) must file⁴ a certificate of service⁵.

(11) RESTRICTIONS ON PARTIES BRINGING VEXATIOUS PROCEEDINGS OR APPLICATIONS WITHOUT MERIT

244. Civil proceedings order restricting civil proceedings by a vexatious litigant.

If, on an application made by the Attorney General¹, the High Court is satisfied that any person has habitually and persistently and without any reasonable ground either instituted vexatious civil proceedings² or made vexatious applications in any civil proceedings, the court may make a civil proceedings order³ which restricts his access to the court for the purpose of instituting or continuing any civil proceedings, or making any application in such proceedings, without first obtaining leave⁴.

9. CASE MANAGEMENT

(1) INTRODUCTION

246. In general.

The court¹ is required to further the overriding objective² by actively managing cases³. For this purpose active case management includes:

- 357 (1) encouraging the parties to co-operate with each other in the conduct of the proceedings⁴;
- 358 (2) identifying the issues at an early stage⁵;
- 359 (3) deciding promptly which issues need full investigation and trial and accordingly disposing summarily of the others⁶;
- 360 (4) deciding the order in which issues are to be resolved⁷;
- 361 (5) encouraging the parties to use an alternative dispute resolution⁸ procedure if the court considers that appropriate and facilitating the use of such procedure⁹;
- 362 (6) helping the parties to settle the whole or part of the case¹⁰;
- 363 (7) fixing timetables or otherwise controlling the progress of the case¹¹;
- 364 (8) considering whether the likely benefits of taking a particular step justify the cost of taking it¹²;
- 365 (9) dealing with as many aspects of the case as it can on the same occasion¹³;
- 366 (10) dealing with the case without the parties needing to attend at court¹⁴;
- 367 (11) making use of technology¹⁵; and
- 368 (12) giving directions to ensure that the trial of a case proceeds quickly and efficiently¹⁶.

247. The court's general powers of management.

The following list of powers is in addition to any powers given to the court¹ by any other rule or practice direction or by any other enactment or any powers it may otherwise have². Except where the Civil Procedure Rules provide otherwise, the court may:

- 381 (13) order any party to file and serve an estimate of costs¹⁸;
- 382 (14) take any other step or make any other order for the purpose of managing the case and furthering the overriding objective¹⁹.

Where the court gives directions it will take into account whether or not a party has complied with Practice Direction (Pre-action Conduct) and any relevant pre-action protocol²⁰.

When the court makes an order, it may make it subject to conditions, including a condition to pay a sum of money into court²¹, and specify the consequence of failure to comply with the order or a condition²². The court may order a party to pay a sum of money into court if that party has, without good reason, failed to comply with a rule, practice direction or relevant pre-action protocol²³. Where a party pays money into court following any such an order²⁴, the money is to be security for any sum payable by that party to any other party in the proceedings²⁵.

A power of the court under the rules to make an order includes a power to vary or revoke the order²⁶.

248. Variation of time limits by parties.

Unless the Civil Procedure Rules or a practice direction provides otherwise or the court¹ orders otherwise, the time specified by a rule or by the court for a person to do any act may be varied by the written agreement of the parties².

² CPR 2.11. For examples of time limits that cannot be varied by agreement between the parties, see CPR 3.8 (sanctions have effect unless defaulting party obtains relief); and PARA 255; CPR 28.4 (variation of case management timetable in the fast track); and PARA 288; and CPR 29.5 (variation of case management timetable in the multi-track); and PARA 297. While the parties may agree in writing to extend the time for service of a defence they may only extend the period by 28 days: see CPR 15.5; and PARA 201. Similarly, CPR 52.6(2) (appeals) prevents the parties from extending any date or time limit set by an order of the appeal court or the lower court, the rules or the relevant practice direction: see PARA 1665. 249. Court's power to extend or shorten time.

As part of the court's¹ general powers of case management², except where the Civil Procedure Rules provide otherwise, the court may extend or shorten the time for compliance with any rule, practice direction or court order, even if an application for extension is made after the time for compliance has expired³.

251. Court's power to make order of its own initiative.

Except where a rule or some other enactment provides otherwise, the court¹ may exercise its powers on an application² or of its own initiative³. Where the court proposes to make an order of its own initiative it may give any person likely to be affected by the order an opportunity to make representations⁴ and where it does so the court must specify the time by and the manner in which the representations must be made⁵. Where the court proposes to make an order of its own initiative and to hold a hearing to decide whether to make the order, it must give each party likely to be affected by the order at least three days' notice of the hearing⁶. The court may, however, make an order of its own initiative without hearing the parties or giving them an opportunity to make representations⁷. Where the court has made such an order, a party affected by the order may apply to have it set aside⁸, varied or stayed⁹ and the order must contain a statement of the right to make such an application¹⁰. If the court of its own initiative strikes out a statement of case or dismisses an application (including an application for permission to appeal or for permission to apply for judicial review), and it considers that the claim or application is totally without merit, the court's order must record that fact and the court must at the same time consider whether it is appropriate to make a civil restraint order¹¹.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 As to the procedure for making an application see CPR Pt 23; and PARA 303 et seq.

252. Power to strike out a statement of case.

The court¹ may strike out² a statement of case (or part of a statement of case)³ where certain conditions are satisfied⁴. When the court strikes out a statement of case it may make any consequential order it considers appropriate⁵.

Where the court makes an order which includes a term that the statement of case of a party is to be struck out if the party does not comply with the order, and the party against whom the order was made does not comply with it, a party may obtain judgment with costs by filing⁶ a request for judgment if certain conditions are satisfied⁷. A party against whom the court has entered judgment under this provision may apply to the court to set the judgment aside⁸.

If the court strikes out a claimant's statement of case and it considers that the claim is totally without merit, the court's order must record that fact and the court must at the same time consider whether it is appropriate to make a civil restraint order⁹.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 As to the meaning of 'striking out' see PARA 218 note 2.

3 In CPR 3.4, 3.5 (see the text and notes 4-7; and PARAS 520-521), reference to a statement of case includes reference to part of a statement of case: CPR 3.4(1). As to the meaning of 'statement of case' see PARA 584.

4 See CPR 3.4(2); and PARA 520. CPR 3.4(2) does not limit any other power of the court to strike out a statement of case: CPR 3.4(5).

253. Consequences of non-payment of certain fees.

Where:

- 383 (1) an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire) is filed¹ without payment of the fee specified by the relevant fees order²; or
- 384 (2) the court³ dispenses with the need for an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list or both⁴; or
- 385 (3) the Civil Procedure Rules do not require an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list to be filed in relation to the claim in question⁵;
- 386 (4) the court has made an order giving permission to proceed with a claim for judicial review⁶; or
- 387 (5) the fee payable for a hearing specified by the relevant fees order is not paid⁷, the court will serve a notice on the claimant⁸ requiring payment of the fee which the relevant fees order specifies as being due on the filing of the allocation questionnaire or the pre-trial check list if, at the time the fee is due, the claimant has not paid the fee or made an application for full or part remission of the fee⁹. The notice will specify the date by which the claimant must pay the fee¹⁰. If the claimant does not pay the fee or make an application for full or part remission of the fee by the date specified in the notice, the claim will automatically be struck out without further order of the court and the claimant will be liable for the costs which the defendant¹¹ has incurred unless the court orders otherwise¹².

Where an application for full or part remission of a fee is refused, the court will serve notice on the claimant requiring payment of the fee by the date specified in the notice¹³. Where an application for part remission of a fee is granted, the court will serve notice on the claimant requiring payment of the balance of the fee by the date specified in the notice¹⁴. If the claimant does not pay the fee by the date specified in the notice the claim will automatically be struck out without further order of the court¹⁵ and the claimant is liable for the costs which the defendant has incurred unless the court orders otherwise¹⁶. If a claimant applies¹⁷ to have the claim reinstated and the court grants relief, the relief must be conditional on the claimant either paying the fee, or filing evidence of full or part remission of the fee¹⁸, within two days of the date of the order if the order granting relief is made at a hearing at which a claimant is present or represented¹⁹, or seven days from the date of service of the order on the claimant in any other case²⁰.

- 388 (a) a defendant files a counterclaim²¹ without payment of the fee specified by the relevant fees order or making an application for full or part remission of the fee²²; or
- 389 (b) the proceedings continue on the counterclaim alone and (i) an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire) is filed without payment of the fee specified by the relevant fees order; (ii) the court dispenses with the need for an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list or both; (iii) the Civil Procedure Rules do not require an allocation questionnaire or a pre-trial check list to be filed in relation to the claim in question; or (iv) the fee payable for a hearing specified by the relevant fees order is not paid²³, the court will serve a notice on the defendant requiring payment of the fee specified in the relevant fees order if, at the time the fee is due, the defendant has not paid it or made an application for full or part remission²⁴. The notice will specify the date by which the defendant must pay the fee²⁵. If the defendant does not pay the fee or make an application for full or part remission of the fee, by the date specified in the notice, the counterclaim will automatically be struck out without further order of the court²⁶. Where an application for full or part remission of a fee is refused, the court will serve notice on the defendant requiring payment of the full fee by the date specified in the notice²⁷. Where an application for part remission of a fee is granted, the court will serve notice on the defendant requiring payment of the balance of the fee by the date specified in the notice²⁸. If the defendant does not pay the fee by the date specified in the notice, the counterclaim will automatically be struck out without further order of the court²⁹. If the defendant applies to have the counterclaim reinstated and the court grants relief, the relief will be conditional on the defendant either paying the fee or filing evidence of full or part remission of the fee³⁰, within two days from the date of the order if the order granting relief is made at a hearing at which the defendant is present or represented³¹, or seven days from the date of service of the order on the defendant in any other case³².

254. Consequences of cheque being dishonoured.

Where any fee¹ is paid by cheque and that cheque is subsequently dishonoured, the court² will serve a notice on the paying party requiring payment of the fee which will specify the date by which the fee must be paid³. If the fee is not paid by the date specified in the notice:

390 (1) where the fee is payable by the claimant⁴, the claim will automatically be struck out without further order of the court⁵;

391 (2) where the fee is payable by the defendant⁶, the defence will automatically be struck out without further order of the court⁷, and the paying party is liable for the costs which any other party has incurred unless the court orders otherwise⁸.

If the paying party applies to have the claim or defence reinstated and the court grants relief, the relief is conditional on that party paying the fee⁹ within two days from the date of the order if the order granting relief is made at a hearing at which the paying party is present or represented¹⁰, or seven days from the date of service of the order on the paying party in any other case¹¹.

255. Consequences have effect unless defaulting party obtains relief.

Where a party has failed to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order, any sanction for failure to comply imposed by the rule, practice direction or court order has effect unless the party in default applies for and obtains relief from the sanction¹. Where, however, the sanction is the payment of costs, the party in default may only obtain relief by appealing against the order for costs².

Where a rule, practice direction or court order requires a party to do something within a specified time, and specifies the consequence of failure to comply, the time for doing the act in question may not be extended by agreement between the parties³.

256. Relief from consequences.

On an application for relief from any sanction imposed for a failure to comply with any rule, practice direction or court order the court¹ will consider all the circumstances including:

- 393 (2) whether the application for relief has been made promptly³;
- 394 (3) whether the failure to comply was intentional⁴;
- 395 (4) whether there is a good explanation for the failure⁵;
- 396 (5) the extent to which the party in default has complied with other rules, practice directions, court orders and any relevant pre-action protocol⁶;
- 397 (6) whether the failure to comply was caused by the party or his legal representative⁷;
- 398 (7) whether the trial date or the likely trial date can still be met if relief is granted⁸;
- 399 (8) the effect which the failure to comply had on each party⁹; and
- 400 (9) the effect which the granting of relief would have on each party¹⁰.

An application for relief must be supported by evidence¹¹.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(1) INTRODUCTION/258. Power to make civil proceedings orders against vexatious litigants.

258. Power to make civil proceedings orders against vexatious litigants.

If, on an application made by the Attorney General¹, the High Court is satisfied that any person has habitually and persistently and without any reasonable ground:

- 401 (1) instituted vexatious civil proceedings², whether in the High Court or any inferior court, and whether against the same person or against different persons; or
- 402 (2) made vexatious applications in any civil proceedings, whether in the High Court or any inferior court, and whether instituted by him or another, the court may, after hearing that person or giving him an opportunity of being heard, make a civil proceedings order³. Such order is an order that:

- 403 (a) no civil proceedings may without the leave of the High Court be instituted in any court by the person against whom the order is made;
- 404 (b) any civil proceedings instituted by him in any court before the making of the order may not be continued by him without the leave of the High Court; and
- 405 (c) no application (other than one for leave under these provisions) may be made by him⁴, in any civil proceedings instituted in any court by any person, without the leave of the High Court⁵.

An order so made may provide that it is to cease to have effect at the end of a specified period, but otherwise remains in force indefinitely⁶.

Leave for the institution or continuance of, or for the making of an application in, any civil proceedings by a person who is the subject of a civil proceedings order for the time being in force must not be given unless the High Court is satisfied that the proceedings or application are not an abuse of the process of the court in question and that there are reasonable grounds for the proceedings or application⁷. No appeal lies from a decision of the High Court refusing such leave⁸.

Where a civil proceedings order or an all proceedings order⁹ is in force against a person (the 'litigant'), an application by the litigant for permission to begin or continue, or to make any application in, any civil proceedings must be made by application notice issued in the High Court and signed by the litigant¹⁰. The application notice, together with any written evidence, will be placed before a High Court judge who may:

- 406 (i) without the attendance of the applicant make an order giving the permission sought;
- 407 (ii) give directions for further written evidence to be supplied by the litigant before an order is made on the application;
- 408 (iii) make an order dismissing the application without a hearing; or
- 409 (iv) give directions for the hearing of the application¹¹.

A person may apply to set aside the grant of any permission given under these provisions if the permission allowed the litigant to bring or continue proceedings against that person or to make any application against him, and it was granted other than at a hearing of which that person was given notice¹².

1 As to the Attorney General see generally PARA 220. An application under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 42 (see the text and notes 2-12) purportedly made on the Attorney General's behalf by the Treasury Solicitor is not to be held to be unauthorised in the absence of evidence to the contrary; rather it is for a person challenging the fact that the solicitor had authority to commence proceedings to lead evidence which lends support to that assertion. In the absence of such evidence there is no need for the Attorney General to lead evidence in rebuttal: A-G v Foley [2000] 2 All ER 609, [2000] CPLR 277, CA. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

2 The scope of this provision includes proceedings in the Court of Appeal on appeal from the High Court or any inferior court but not proceedings originating in the Court of Appeal: see A-G v Jones [1990] 2 All ER 636, [1990] 1 WLR 859, CA. In considering whether any proceedings are vexatious, the court must look at the whole history of the matter: see Re Vernazza [1959] 2 All ER 200, [1959] 1 WLR 622; affd [1960] 1 QB 197, [1960] 1 All ER 183, CA, revsd in part on other grounds sub nom A-G v Vernazza [1960] AC 965, [1960] 3 All ER 97, HL.

A copy of any order so made must be published in the London Gazette: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 42(5). Where a person has instituted vexatious prosecutions, a criminal proceedings order may be made; and, if appropriate, an all proceedings order, which is an order with the combined effect of a civil proceedings order and a criminal proceedings order, may be made: see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 1046.

The application notice must be filed together with any written evidence on which the litigant relies in support of his application; and either in the application notice or in written evidence filed in support of the application, the previous occasions on which the litigant made an application for permission under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 42(1A) must be listed: Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A paras 7.4, 7.5.

Such directions may include an order that the application notice be served on the Attorney General and on any person against whom the litigant desires to bring the proceedings for which permission is being sought: para 7.7. Any order made under para 7.6 or para 7.7 will be served on the litigant at the address given in the application notice, and CPR Pt 6 (provisions for service: see PARA 138 et seq) applies: Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 7.8. 258 Power to make civil proceedings orders against vexatious litigants

NOTE 7--See Ewing v DPP [2010] EWCA Civ 70, [2010] All ER (D) 143 (Feb) (vexatious litigant subject to civil proceedings order required leave before seeking permission to commence proceedings for judicial review in criminal cause or matter).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(1) INTRODUCTION/259. Power to make civil restraint orders.

259. Power to make civil restraint orders.

A practice direction may set out the circumstances in which the court¹ has the power to make a civil restraint order against a party to proceedings, the procedure where a party applies for a civil restraint order against another party and the consequences of the court making a civil restraint order². Such a practice direction has been made and it applies where the court is considering whether to make a limited civil restraint order, an extended civil restraint order or a general civil restraint order, against a party who has issued claims or made applications which are totally without merit³. By the relevant practice direction, the other party or parties to the proceedings may apply for any civil restraint order, specifying which type of order is sought⁴.

A limited civil restraint order may be made by a judge of any court where a party has made two or more applications which are totally without merit⁵. Where the court makes a limited civil restraint order, the party against whom the order is made (1) will be restrained from making any further applications in the proceedings in which the order is made without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order; (2) may apply for amendment or discharge of the order provided he has first obtained the permission of a judge identified in the order; and (3) may apply for permission to appeal the order and if permission is granted, may appeal the order⁶. Where a party who is subject to a limited civil restraint order makes a further application in the proceedings in which the order is made without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order, such application will automatically be dismissed without the judge having to make any further order and without the need for the other party to respond to it⁷. Where such a party repeatedly makes applications for permission pursuant to that order which are totally without merit, the court may direct that if the party makes any further application for permission which is totally without merit, the decision to dismiss the application will be final and there will be no right of appeal, unless the judge who refused permission grants permission to appeal⁸.

An extended civil restraint order may be made by a judge of the Court of Appeal, a judge of the High Court or a designated civil judge or his appointed deputy in a county court⁹, where a party has persistently issued claims or made applications which are totally without merit¹⁰. Unless the court otherwise orders, where the court makes an extended civil restraint order, the party against whom the order is made (a) will be restrained from issuing claims or making applications in any court if the order has been made by a judge of the Court of Appeal, the High Court or any county court if the order has been made by a judge of the High Court or any county court identified in the order if the order has been made by a designated civil judge or his appointed deputy, concerning any matter involving or relating to or touching upon or leading to the proceedings in which the order is made without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order¹¹; (b) may apply for amendment or discharge of the order provided he has first obtained the permission of a judge identified in the order¹²; and (c) may apply for permission to appeal the order and if permission is granted, may appeal the order¹³. Where a party who is subject to an extended civil restraint order issues a claim or makes an application in a court identified in the order concerning any matter involving or relating to or touching upon or leading to the proceedings in which the order is made without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order, the claim or application will automatically be struck out or dismissed without the judge having to make any further order and without the need for the other party to respond to it¹⁴. Where such a party repeatedly makes applications for permission pursuant to that order which are totally without merit, the court may direct that if the party makes any further application for permission which is totally without merit, the decision to dismiss the application will be final and there will be no right of appeal, unless the judge who refused permission grants permission to appeal¹⁵.

A general civil restraint order may be made by a judge of the Court of Appeal, a judge of the High Court or a designated civil judge or his appointed deputy in a county court¹⁶, where the party against whom the order is made persists in issuing claims or making applications which are totally without merit, in circumstances where an extended civil restraint order would not be sufficient or appropriate¹⁷. Unless the court otherwise orders, where the court makes a general civil restraint order, the party against whom the order is made (i) will be restrained from issuing any claim or making any application in any court if the order has been made by a judge of the Court of Appeal, in the High Court or any county court if the order has been made by a judge of the High Court, or any county court identified in the order if the order has been made by a designated civil judge or his appointed deputy, without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order¹⁸; (ii) may apply for amendment or discharge of the order provided he has first obtained the permission of a judge identified in the order¹⁹; and (iii) may apply for permission to appeal the order and if permission is granted, may appeal the order²⁰. Where a party who is subject to a general civil restraint order issues a claim or makes an application in a court identified in the order without first obtaining the permission of a judge identified in the order, the claim or application will automatically be struck out or dismissed without the judge having to make any further order and without the need for the other party to respond to it²¹. Where such a party repeatedly makes applications for permission pursuant to that order which are totally without merit, the court may direct that if the party makes any further application for permission which is totally without merit, the decision to dismiss that application will be final and there will be no right of appeal, unless the judge who refused permission grants permission to appeal²².

2 CPR 3.11. 'Civil restraint order' means an order restraining a party (1) from making any further applications in current proceedings (a limited civil restraint order); (2) from issuing certain claims or making certain applications in specified courts (an extended civil restraint order); or (3) from issuing any claim or making any application in specified courts (a general civil restraint order): CPR 2.3(1). See Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C (which was the result of the decisions in Bhamjee v Forsdick [2003] EWCA Civ 799, [2003] All ER (D) 366 (May) and Bhamjee v Forsdick (No 2) [2003] EWCA Civ 1113, [2003] All ER (D) 429 (Jul), [2004] 1 WLR 88).

3 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 1. As to situations in which the court must strike out a claim and consider whether to make a civil restraint order see CPR 3.3(7), 3.4(6) and 23.12 (PARAS 251, 520, 314). See also CPR 52.10(6), which makes similar provision where the appeal court refuses an application for permission to appeal, strikes out an appellant's notice or dismisses an appeal; PARA 1671.

4 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C paras 5.1, 5.2. Such an application must be made using procedure in CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq) unless the court otherwise directs: Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 5.2. Examples of the different types of order are annexed to the practice direction; the examples may be modified as appropriate in any particular case: para 5.3.

5 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 2.1. A limited civil restraint order (1) is limited to the particular proceedings in which it is made; (2) will remain in effect for the duration of the proceedings in which it is made, unless the court otherwise orders; and (3) must identify the judge or judges to whom an application for permission under para 2.2(1), 2.2(2) or 2.8 should be made: para 2.9. Where a series of claims have been instituted, a civil restraint order may be made in appropriate circumstances notwithstanding the fact that some of the claims have merit: Thakerar v Lynch Hall & Hornby [2005] EWHC 2751 (Ch), [2006] 1 WLR 1511.

6 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 2.2. An application for permission under para 2.2(1) or 2.2(2) (heads (1), (2) in the text) must be made in writing and must include the other party's written response, if any, to the notice served under para 2.4; and will be determined without a hearing: para 2.6. Where a party makes an application for permission under para 2.2(1) or 2.2(2) and permission is refused, any application for permission to appeal must be made in writing and will be determined without a hearing: para 2.8.

7 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 2.3(1).

8 Practice Direction--Civil Restraint Orders PD 3C para 2.3(2). Such an order may only be made by a Court of Appeal judge, a High Court judge or master or a designated civil judge or his appointed deputy: para 2.7.

- 413 (4) the defendant is an individual⁶, the court will transfer the proceedings to the defendant's home court when a defence is filed⁷. Where the defence is that money claimed has been paid⁸ or if the defendant has admitted part of a claim for a specified sum of money⁹ and the claimant notifies the court that he wishes the proceedings to continue¹⁰, the court will, however, transfer the proceedings to the defendant's home court when it receives that notification from the claimant¹¹.

Where the claim is against two or more defendants with different home courts and the defendant whose defence is filed first is an individual, proceedings are transferred to the home court of that defendant¹².

The time when a claim is automatically transferred under this rule may be varied by a practice direction in respect of claims issued by the production centre¹³.

These provisions for automatic transfer do not apply where the claim was commenced in a specialist list¹⁴.

262. Allocation generally.

In order to provide the court with information additional to that which is contained in the statements of case¹ and for the purposes of case management by the court, allocation questionnaires² are served on the parties by the court³. Upon consideration of the allocation questionnaires the court will allocate the case to a track⁴ and give appropriate directions⁵.

1 I.e. the particulars of claim (filed with or after the claim form: see CPR 7.4(1)(a) or CPR 7.4(3); and PARA 123); the defence (filed at court: see CPR 15.2; and PARA 199); and any reply (filed at court when filing the allocation questionnaire: see CPR 15.8; and PARA 604). 263. Allocation questionnaire.

When a defendant¹ files a defence² the court³ will serve⁴ an allocation questionnaire on each party unless the defence is that money claimed has been paid⁵ or the defendant has admitted part of a claim for a specified sum of money⁶ and the relevant rules⁷ apply⁸ or the court dispenses with the need for a questionnaire⁹. Where there are two or more defendants and at least one of them files a defence, the court will serve the allocation questionnaire when all the defendants have filed a defence or when the period for the filing of the last defence has expired, whichever is the sooner¹⁰.

Where proceedings are automatically transferred to the defendant's home court¹¹, the court in which the proceedings have been commenced will serve an allocation questionnaire before the proceedings are transferred¹². Where the defence is that money claimed has been paid or the defendant has admitted part of a claim for a specified sum of money, the relevant rules apply¹³ and the proceedings are not automatically transferred to the defendant's home court¹⁴, the court will serve an allocation questionnaire on each party when the claimant¹⁵ files a notice indicating that he wishes the proceedings to continue¹⁶.

The court may, on the application of the claimant, serve an allocation questionnaire earlier than it would otherwise serve it under these provisions¹⁷. Furthermore, the time when the court serves an allocation questionnaire under these provisions may be varied by a practice direction in respect of claims issued by the production centre¹⁸.

Each party must file the completed allocation questionnaire no later than the date specified in it, which must be at least 14 days after the date when it is deemed to be served on the party in question¹⁹. The date for filing the completed allocation questionnaire may not be varied by agreement between the parties²⁰.

An estimate of costs must be filed and served when an allocation questionnaire is filed by a party to a claim which is outside the limits of the small claims track²¹. A party may also wish to give the court extra information at this stage about matters which he believes may affect its decision about allocation or case management²².

264. Consequences of failure to file an allocation questionnaire.

If no party files an allocation questionnaire within the time specified by the relevant form¹ the court² will order that unless an allocation questionnaire is filed within seven days from service³ of that order, the claim, defence and any counterclaim⁴ will be struck out⁵ without further order of the court⁶. Where a party files an allocation questionnaire but another party does not, the file will be referred to a judge⁷ for his directions and the court may allocate the claim to a track⁸ if it considers that it has enough information to do so, or order that an allocation hearing⁹ is listed and that all or any parties must attend¹⁰.

If a party fails to file an allocation questionnaire, the court may give any direction it considers appropriate¹¹.

265. Stay to allow for settlement of the case.

When filing¹ the completed allocation questionnaire, a party may make a written request for the proceedings to be stayed² while the parties try to settle the case by alternative dispute resolution³ or other means⁴. Where all parties so request a stay or the court⁵, of its own initiative, considers that such a stay would be appropriate, the court will direct that the proceedings, either in whole or in part, be stayed for one month or for such specified period as it considers appropriate⁶. The court may extend the stay until such date or for such specified period as it considers appropriate⁷.

Any party may apply for a stay to be lifted⁸.

Where the court stays the proceedings under these provisions, the claimant⁹ must tell the court if a settlement is reached¹⁰. If the claimant does not tell the court by the end of the period of the stay that a settlement has been reached, the court will give such directions as to the management of the case as it considers appropriate¹¹.

1 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

2 As to the meaning of 'stay' see PARA 233 note 11. The court will generally accept a letter from any party or from the solicitor for any party as an application to extend the stay. The letter should confirm that the application is made with the agreement of all parties and explain the steps being taken and identify any mediator or expert assisting with the process: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 3.1(1).

More than one extension of the stay may be granted: para 3.1(3).

9 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

10 CPR 26.4(4). Where the whole of the proceedings are settled during a stay, the taking of any of the following steps will be treated as an application for the stay to be lifted: (1) an application for a consent order (in any form) to give effect to the settlement; (2) an application for the approval of a settlement where a party is a person under a disability; (3) giving notice of acceptance of money paid into court in satisfaction of the claim or applying for money in court to be paid out: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 3.4.

11 CPR 26.4(5). At the end of the stay the file will be referred to a judge for his directions. 266. Allocation.

The court¹ will allocate the claim to a track:

- 414 (1) when every defendant² has filed³ an allocation questionnaire; or
- 415 (2) when the period for filing the allocation questionnaires has expired, whichever is the sooner, unless it has stayed⁴ the proceedings⁵ or dispensed with the need for allocation questionnaires⁶. If the court has stayed the proceedings⁷, it will allocate the claim to a track at the end of the period of the stay⁸.

Before deciding the track to which to allocate proceedings or deciding whether to give directions for an allocation hearing to be fixed, the court may order a party to provide further information about his case⁹. The court may hold an allocation hearing if it thinks it is necessary¹⁰.

267. Claims normally allocated to the small claims track.

The small claims track is the normal track for:

- 416 (1) any claim for personal injuries¹ where:
 - 13 21. (a) the value of the claim is not more than £5,000²; and
 - 22. (b) the value of any claim for damages for personal injuries³ is not more than £1,000⁴;
- 14 417 (2) any claim which includes a claim by a tenant of residential premises against a landlord where:
 - 15 23. (a) the tenant is seeking an order requiring the landlord to carry out repairs or other work to the premises (whether or not the tenant is also seeking some other remedy)⁵;
 - 24. (b) the cost of the repairs or other work to the premises is estimated to be not more than £1,000⁶; and
 - 25. (c) the value of any other claim for damages is not more than £1,000⁷.
- 16

Subject to the above provision, the small claims track is the normal track for any claim which has a value of not more than £5,000⁸. A case involving a disputed allegation of dishonesty will not, however, usually be suitable for the small claims track⁹. Moreover, the court will not allocate a claim to the small claims track if it includes a claim by a tenant of residential premises against his landlord for a remedy in respect of harassment or unlawful eviction¹⁰.

The procedural rules for the preparation of the case and the conduct of the hearing¹¹ are designed to make it possible for a litigant to conduct his own case without legal representation if he wishes¹².

268. Claims normally allocated to the fast track.

The fast track is the normal track for any claim:

- 418 (1) for which the small claims track is not the normal track¹; and
- 419 (2) which has a value: (a) for proceedings issued on or after 6 April 2009, of not more than £25,000; and (b) for proceedings issued before 6 April 2009, of not more than £15,000², but only if the court considers that the trial is likely to last for no longer than one day³ and oral expert evidence at trial will be limited to: (i) one expert per party in relation to any expert field⁴; and (ii) expert evidence in two expert fields⁵.

A claim may be allocated to the fast track or ordered to remain on that track although there is to be a split trial⁶.

2 CPR 26.6(4)(b).

3 CPR 26.6(5)(a). For these purposes, the court will regard a day as being a period of five hours, and will consider whether that is likely to be sufficient time for the case to be heard: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 9.1(3)(a). The possibility that a trial might last longer than one day is not necessarily a conclusive reason for the court to allocate or to re-allocate a claim to the multi-track: para 9.1(3)(c). As to the multi-track see PARA 269.

As to the meaning of 'counterclaim' see PARA 618 note 3. As to Part 20 claims see CPR Pt 20; and PARA 618 et seq.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(2) THE PRELIMINARY STAGE OF CASE MANAGEMENT/269. Claims normally allocated to the multi-track.

269. Claims normally allocated to the multi-track.

The multi-track is the normal track for any claim for which the small claims track or the fast track is not the normal track¹.

The case management of a claim which is allocated to the multi-track will normally be dealt with at a civil trial centre². Where a claim is issued in or automatically transferred to a court which is not a civil trial centre (a 'feeder court') and a judge³ sitting at a feeder court decides, on the basis of the allocation questionnaires and any other documents filed⁴ by the parties, that the claim should be dealt with on the multi-track he will normally make an order allocating the claim to that track, giving case management directions and transferring the claim to a civil trial centre⁵. These provisions do not apply to a claim for possession of land in the county court, where the defendant⁶ has filed a defence, or to any claim which is being dealt with at the Royal Courts of Justice⁷.

Case management of a claim in specialist proceedings⁸ must be dealt with at a civil trial centre. Such a claim will be allocated to the multi-track irrespective of its value, and must be transferred to a civil trial centre for allocation and case management if not already there⁹.

1 CPR 26.6(6). As to claims for which the small claims track is the normal track see PARA 267; and as to claims for which the fast track is the normal track see PARA 268. As to the multi-track see further PARA 293 et seq.

270. General rule for allocation.

In considering whether to allocate a claim to the normal track for that claim¹, the court will have regard to the following matters²:

- 420 (1) the financial value, if any, of the claim³;
- 421 (2) the nature of the remedy sought⁴;
- 422 (3) the likely complexity of the facts, law or evidence⁵;
- 423 (4) the number of parties or likely parties⁶;
- 424 (5) the value of any counterclaim⁷ or other Part 20 claim⁸ and the complexity of any matters relating to it⁹;
- 425 (6) the amount of oral evidence which may be required¹⁰;
- 426 (7) the importance of the claim to persons who are not parties to the proceedings¹¹;
- 427 (8) the views expressed by the parties¹²; and
- 428 (9) the circumstances of the parties¹³.

The court will allocate a claim which has no financial value to the track which it considers most suitable having regard to the matters set out above¹⁴.

The court will not allocate proceedings to a track if the financial value of the claim, assessed by the court¹⁵, exceeds the limit for that track unless all the parties consent to the allocation of the claim to that track¹⁶. Where two or more claimants¹⁷ have started a claim against the same defendant using the same claim form and each claimant has a claim against the defendant¹⁸ separate from the other claimants, the court will consider the claim of each claimant separately when it assesses financial value¹⁹.

The court will not allocate a claim to the small claims track if it includes a claim by a tenant of residential premises against his landlord for a remedy in respect of harassment or unlawful eviction²⁰.

271. Notice of allocation.

When it has allocated a claim to a track, the court¹ will serve² notice of allocation on every party³ and, when doing so, it will also serve a copy of the allocation questionnaires filed⁴ by the other parties⁵ and a copy of any further information provided by another party about his case (whether by order or not)⁶.

272. Re-allocation.

The court¹ may subsequently re-allocate a claim to a different track². Where a party is dissatisfied with an order made allocating the claim to a track he may appeal or apply to the court to re-allocate the claim³.

Where there has been a change in the circumstances since an order was made allocating the claim to a track the court may re-allocate the claim either on application or on its own initiative⁴.

He should appeal if the order was made at a hearing at which he was present or represented, or of which he was given due notice, and in any other case he should apply to the court to re-allocate the claim: para 11.1(2), (3).

4 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 11.2. 273. Allocation and case management of proceedings for the assessment of damages.

Where the court has made an order or given judgment which requires the amount of money to be paid by one party to another to be decided by the court¹, the court will give directions which may include:

- 429 (1) a direction listing the claim for a disposal hearing;
- 430 (2) a direction allocating or re-allocating the claim;
- 431 (3) a direction that allocation questionnaires be filed² by a specified date;
- 432 (4) an order staying the claim while the parties try to settle the case by alternative dispute resolution³ or other means⁴.

If, when the court makes a relevant order, the claim has not been allocated to a track and the financial value of the claim⁵ is such that the claim would, if defended, be allocated to the small claims track, the court will normally allocate it to that track⁶. Otherwise, the court will not normally allocate the claim to a track (other than the small claims track) unless the amount payable appears to be genuinely disputed on substantial grounds or the dispute is not suitable to be dealt with at a disposal hearing⁷.

At a disposal hearing the court may decide the amount payable under or in consequence of the relevant order and give judgment for that amount⁸, or give directions as to the future conduct of the proceedings⁹. If the claim has been allocated to the small claims track, or the court decides at the disposal hearing to allocate it to that track, the court may treat the disposal hearing as a final hearing¹⁰.

1 Such an order or judgment (referred to as a 'relevant order') may have been obtained (1) by a judgment in default under CPR Pt 12 (see PARA 506 et seq); (2) by a judgment on an admission under CPR Pt 14 (see PARA 187 et seq); (3) on the striking out of a statement of case under CPR Pt 3 (see PARA 520 et seq); (4) on a summary judgment application under CPR Pt 24 (see PARA 524 et seq); (5) on the determination of a preliminary issue or on a trial as to liability; or (6) at trial, and includes an order for an amount of a debt, damages or interest to be decided by the court, an order for the taking of an account or the making of an inquiry as to any sum due, and any similar order, but does not include an order for the assessment of costs: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.1(1)-(3). As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

3 As to the meaning of 'alternative dispute resolution' (ADR) see PARA 35 note 3; and as to alternative dispute resolution see generally ARBITRATION vol 2 (2008) PARA 1201 et seq.

4 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.2(1). Directions may specify the level or type of judge before whom a hearing or a further hearing will take place and the nature and purpose of that hearing: para 12.2(2). Where the parties apply for a relevant order by consent, they should if possible file with their draft consent order agreed directions for the court's approval: para 12.2(3).

5 Ie determined in accordance with CPR Pt 26: see CPR 26.8(2); and PARA 270.

6 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.3(1).

7 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.3(2). A disposal hearing is a hearing which will not normally last longer than 30 minutes, and at which the court will not normally hear oral evidence: see para 12.4(1).

8 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.4(2) (a). Except where the claim has been allocated to the small claims track, the court will not exercise its power under para 12.4(2)(a) unless any written evidence on which the claimant relies has been served on the defendant at least three days before the disposal hearing: para 12.4(5). CPR 32.6 (see PARA 751) applies to evidence at a disposal hearing unless the court otherwise directs: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.4(4).

Unless the court otherwise directs, a master or a district judge may decide the amount payable under a relevant order irrespective of the financial value of the claim and of the track to which the claim may have been allocated: para 12.6.

9 Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.4(2) (b). Attention is drawn to (1) Practice Direction about Costs PD 43-48 and in particular to the court's power to make a summary assessment of costs; (2) CPR 44.13(1), which provides that if an order makes no mention of costs, none are payable in respect of the proceedings to which it relates (see PARA 1756); and (3) CPR 27.14 (special rules about costs in cases allocated to the small claims track: see PARA 285): Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.5(1). CPR Pt 46 (fast track trial costs) will not apply to a case dealt with at a disposal hearing whatever the financial value of the claim; so the costs of a disposal hearing will be in the discretion of the court: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26 para 12.5(2).

(3) THE SMALL CLAIMS TRACK

274. Scope of the procedural rules for small claims.

Part 27 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ sets out the special procedure for dealing with claims which have been allocated to the small claims track² and limits the amount of costs that can be recovered in respect of a claim which has been allocated to the small claims track³. A claim being dealt with under Part 27 is called a small claim⁴.

275. Extent to which other Parts of the Civil Procedure Rules apply to small claims.

Certain specified Parts of the Civil Procedure Rules, dealing with interim remedies¹, disclosure and inspection², evidence³, experts and assessors⁴, further information⁵, offers to settle⁶ and hearings⁷ do not apply to small claims, or apply only in part⁸. The other Parts of the rules apply to small claims except to the extent that a rule limits such application⁹.

4 Ie CPR Pt 35 (see PARA 838 et seq) except CPR 35.1 (see PARA 838) which requires the court to restrict expert evidence; CPR 35.3 (see PARA 848) which imposes an overriding duty on expert witnesses to help the court; CPR 35.7 (see PARA 840) which gives the court power to direct that evidence is to be given by a single joint expert; and CPR 35.8 (see PARA 847) which provides for the giving of instructions to a single joint expert: CPR 27.2(1)(e).

5 Ie CPR Pt 18 (see PARAS 611-612): CPR 27.2(1)(f). However, the court of its own initiative may order a party to provide further information if it considers it appropriate to do so: CPR 27.2(3).

277. Preparation for the small claim hearing.

After allocation to the small claims track the court¹ will:

- 433 (1) give standard directions² and fix a date for the final hearing³;
- 434 (2) give special directions⁴ and fix a date for the final hearing⁵;
- 435 (3) give special directions and direct that the court will consider what further directions are to be given no later than 28 days after the date the special directions were given⁶;
- 436 (4) fix a date for a preliminary hearing⁷; or
- 437 (5) give notice that it proposes to deal with the small claim⁸ without a hearing⁹ and invite the parties to notify the court by a specified date if they agree with the proposal¹⁰.

The court will give the parties at least 21 days' notice of the date fixed for the final hearing, unless the parties agree to accept less notice¹¹, and inform them of the amount of time allowed for the final hearing¹².

The court may add to, vary or revoke directions¹³.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 'Standard directions' means (1) a direction that each party must, at least 14 days before the date fixed for the final hearing, file and serve on every other party copies of all documents (including any expert's report) on which he intends to rely at the hearing (CPR 27.4(3)(a)(i)); and (2) any other standard directions set out in the relevant practice direction (CPR 27.4(3)(a)(ii)). See the forms of standard directions set out in Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 Appendix B in The Civil Court Practice. Appendix A includes an indication of the information and documentation which the court usually needs in particular types of case, ie road accident cases; building disputes, repairs, goods sold and similar contractual claims; landlord and tenant claims; and breach of duty claims.

278. Preliminary small claim hearing.

The court¹ may hold a preliminary hearing for the consideration of the small claim², but only:

- 438 (1) where it considers that special directions³ are needed to ensure a fair hearing⁴ and it appears necessary for a party to attend at court to ensure that he understands what he must do to comply with the special directions⁵; or
- 439 (2) to enable it to dispose of the claim on the basis that one or other of the parties has no real prospect of success at a final hearing⁶; or
- 440 (3) to enable it to strike out⁷ a statement of case⁸ or part of a statement of case on the basis that the statement of case, or the part to be struck out, discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the claim⁹.

When considering whether or not to hold a preliminary hearing, the court must have regard to the desirability of limiting the expense to the parties of attending court¹⁰. Where the court decides to hold a preliminary hearing, it will give the parties at least 14 days' notice of the date of the hearing¹¹ and may treat the preliminary hearing as the final hearing of the claim if all the parties agree¹².

At or after the preliminary hearing the court will:

- 441 (a) fix the date of the final hearing (if it has not been fixed already) and give the parties at least 21 days' notice of the date fixed unless the parties agree to accept less notice¹³;
- 442 (b) inform them of the amount of time allowed for the final hearing¹⁴; and
- 443 (c) give any appropriate directions¹⁵.

279. Conduct of the small claim hearing.

The court¹ may adopt any method of proceeding at a small claim hearing that it considers to be fair² and the hearing will be informal³. A party may present his own case at a hearing or a lawyer or lay representative⁴ may present it for him⁵. Any of its officers or employees may represent a corporate party⁶.

The general rule is that a small claim hearing will be in public⁷. The judge⁸ may, however, decide to hold it in private if the parties agree or if a specified ground⁹ applies¹⁰. The strict rules of evidence do not apply¹¹ and the court need not take evidence on oath¹² and may limit cross-examination¹³. A hearing that takes place at the court will be tape recorded by the court¹⁴.

The court must give reasons for its decision¹⁵.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 See CPR 27.8(1). As to the meaning of 'small claim' see PARA 274.

3 CPR 27.8(2).

4 For these purposes, 'lawyer' means a barrister, a solicitor or a legal executive employed by a solicitor, and a lay representative means any other person: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 3.1. The Lay Representatives (Rights of Audience) Order 1999, SI 1999/1225, provides that a lay representative may not exercise any right of audience where his client does not attend the hearing, at any stage after judgment or on any appeal brought against any decision made by the district judge in the proceedings: art 3(1). However the court, exercising its general discretion to hear anybody, may hear a lay representative even in circumstances excluded by the 1999 Order: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 3.2(2), (3).

5 Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 3.2(1).

7 Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 4.1(1).

8 The functions of the court described in CPR Pt 27 which are to be carried out by a judge will generally be carried out by a district judge but may be carried out by a circuit judge: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 1.

9 I.e a ground mentioned in CPR 39.2(3): see PARA 6.

10 Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 4.1(2). A hearing or part of a hearing which takes place other than at the court, eg at the home or business premises of a party, will not be in public: para 4.1(3). A hearing that takes place at the court will generally be in the judge's room but it may take place in a courtroom: para 4.2.

13 CPR 27.8(5). The judge may in particular (1) ask questions of any witness himself before allowing any other person to do so; (2) ask questions of all or any of the witnesses himself before allowing any other person to ask questions of any witnesses; (3) refuse to allow cross-examination of any witness until all the witnesses have given evidence in chief; (4) limit cross-examination of a witness to a fixed time or to a particular subject or issue, or both: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 4.3. As to the meaning of 'cross-examination' see PARA 50 note 4.

15 CPR 27.8(6). The judge may give reasons for his judgment as briefly and simply as the nature of the case allows: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 5.3(1). He will normally do so orally at the hearing, but he may give them later either in writing or at a hearing fixed for him to do so: para 5.3(2). Where the judge decides the case without a hearing under CPR 27.10 (see PARA 282) or a party who has given notice under CPR 27.9(1) (see PARA 281) does not attend the hearing, the judge will prepare a note of his reasons and the court will send a copy to each party: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 5.4. Nothing in the relevant practice direction affects the duty of a judge at the request of a party to make a note of the matters referred to in the County Courts Act 1984 s 80: Practice Direction--Small Claims Track PD 27 para 5.5. At the hearing of any proceedings in a county court in which there is a right of appeal or from which an appeal may be brought with leave, the judge must, at the request of any party, make a note of any question of law raised at the hearing, of the facts in evidence in relation to any such question and of his decision on any such question and of his determination of the proceedings: County Courts Act 1984 s 80(1). Where such a note has been taken, the judge must (whether notice of appeal has been served or not), on the application of any party to the proceedings, and on payment by that party of such fee as may be prescribed by an order under the Courts Act 2003 s 92 (fees), furnish him with a copy of the note, and must sign the copy, and the copy so signed must be used at the hearing of the appeal: County Courts Act 1984 s 80(2) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 271(b)). 281. Non-attendance of parties at a final hearing of a small claim.

If a party who does not attend a final hearing of a small claim¹:

- 444 (1) has given written notice to the court² and the other party at least seven days³ before the hearing date that he will not attend;
- 445 (2) has served on the other party at least seven days before the hearing date any other documents which he has filed with the court; and
- 446 (3) has, in his written notice, requested the court to decide the claim in his absence and has confirmed his compliance with heads (1) and (2) above, the court will take into account that party's statement of case⁴ and any other documents he has filed⁵ and served when it decides the claim⁶.

If a claimant⁷ does not attend the hearing and does not give such notice that he will not attend, the court may strike out⁸ the claim⁹. If a defendant¹⁰ does not attend the hearing or give the above-mentioned notice of non-attendance and the claimant either does attend the hearing or gives such notice, the court may decide the claim on the basis of the claimant's evidence alone¹¹. If neither party attends or gives such notice, the court may strike out the claim and any defence and counterclaim¹².

Nothing in these provisions affects the general power of the court to adjourn a hearing, for example where a party who wishes to attend a hearing on the date fixed cannot do so for a good reason¹³.

283. Setting judgment aside and re-hearing small claim.

A party who was neither present nor represented at the hearing of the small claim¹ and who has not given written notice of non-attendance to the court² may apply for an order that a judgment³ be set aside⁴ and the claim re-heard⁵. A party may not, however, make such an application if the court, with the parties' agreement, dealt with the claim without a hearing⁶.

A party who applies for an order setting aside a judgment under this provision must make the application not more than 14 days⁷ after the day on which notice of the judgment was served⁸ on him⁹.

The court may grant such an application only if the applicant had a good reason for not attending or being represented at the hearing or giving written notice of non-attendance to the court¹⁰ and if he has a reasonable prospect of success at the hearing¹¹.

If a judgment is set aside the court must fix a new hearing for the claim¹² which may take place immediately after the hearing of the application to set the judgment aside and may be dealt with by the judge¹³ who set aside the judgment¹⁴.

284. Appeal where small claim dealt with in a party's absence or without a hearing.

Rights of appeal and the procedure on appeals are discussed elsewhere in this title¹. Where the court dealt with the claim to which the appellant is a party either without a hearing² or in his absence because he gave notice requesting the court to decide the claim in his absence³, an application for permission to appeal must be made to the appeal court⁴. Where an appeal is allowed the appeal court will, if possible, dispose of the case at the same time without referring the claim to the lower court⁵ or ordering a new hearing and may do so without hearing further evidence⁶.

285. Costs on the small claims track.

Where the financial value of a claim exceeds the limit for the small claims track¹ but the claim has been allocated² to that track, the small claims track costs provisions will apply unless the parties agree that the fast track³ costs provisions are to apply⁴. Where the parties agree that the fast track costs provisions are to apply, the claim and any appeal will be treated for the purposes of costs as if it were proceeding on the fast track except that trial costs will be in the discretion of the court⁵ and will not exceed the amount set out⁶ for the value of claim⁷.

In any other case which has been allocated to the small claims track⁸, the court may not order a party to pay a sum to another party in respect of that other party's costs, fees and expenses, including those relating to an appeal, except:

- 447 (1) the fixed costs attributable to issuing the claim which are payable⁹ or would be payable¹⁰ if Part 45 of the Civil Procedure Rules applied to the claim¹¹;
- 448 (2) in proceedings which included a claim for an injunction¹² or an order for specific performance a sum not exceeding the amount specified in the relevant practice direction for legal advice and assistance relating to that claim¹³;
- 449 (3) any court fees paid by that other party¹⁴;
- 450 (4) expenses which a party or witness has reasonably incurred in travelling to and from a hearing or in staying away from home for the purposes of attending a hearing¹⁵;
- 451 (5) a sum not exceeding the amount specified in the relevant practice direction for any loss of earnings or loss of leave by a party or witness due to attending a hearing or to staying away from home for the purposes of attending a hearing¹⁶;
- 452 (6) a sum not exceeding the amount specified in the relevant practice direction for an expert's fees¹⁷; and
- 453 (7) such further costs as the court may assess by the summary procedure and order to be paid by a party who has behaved unreasonably¹⁸.

Where a claim is allocated to the small claims track and subsequently re-allocated to another track, these provisions cease to apply after the claim has been re-allocated and the fast track or multi-track¹⁹ costs rules will apply from the date of re-allocation²⁰.

(4) THE FAST TRACK

286. Scope of the procedural rules for cases allocated to the fast track.

Part 28 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ contains general provisions about management of cases allocated to the fast track and applies only to cases allocated to that track².

1 Ie CPR Pt 28: see PARA 287 et seq.

2 CPR 28.1. As to claims normally allocated to the fast track see PARA 268.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(4) THE FAST TRACK/287. General provisions; directions for management of cases allocated to the fast track.

287. General provisions; directions for management of cases allocated to the fast track.

Case management of cases allocated to the fast track¹ will generally be by directions given at two stages in the case, first at allocation to the track² and second on the filing of the pre-trial check lists (listing questionnaires)³. The court⁴ will seek whenever possible to give directions at those stages only and to do so without the need for a hearing to take place and it will expect to do so with the co-operation of the parties⁵. The court will, however, hold a hearing to give directions whenever it appears necessary or desirable to do so, and where this happens because of the default of a party or his legal representative⁶ it will usually impose a sanction⁷. The court may give directions at any hearing on the application of a party or on its own initiative⁸.

When it allocates a case to the fast track, the court will give directions for the management of the case and set a timetable⁹ for the steps to be taken between the giving of the directions and the trial¹⁰. When it gives directions, the court will fix the date by which the parties must file their pre-trial check lists (listing questionnaires)¹¹ and the trial date¹² or fix a period, not exceeding three weeks, within which the trial is to take place¹³, which will be specified in the notice of allocation¹⁴. The standard period between the giving of directions and the trial will be not more than 30 weeks¹⁵. The matters to be dealt with by such directions include disclosure¹⁶ of documents¹⁷, service of witness statements¹⁸ and expert evidence¹⁹. If the court decides not to direct standard disclosure²⁰, it may direct that no disclosure take place²¹ or specify the documents or the classes of documents which the parties must disclose²².

The court's power to award trial costs is limited²³.

1 As to cases normally allocated to the fast track see PARA 268.

2 See the text and notes 9-22.

3 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.1. As to pre-trial check lists see PARA 290. As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

4 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

5 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.2.

6 As to the meaning of 'legal representative' see PARA 1833 note 13.

7 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.3. When the court fixes a hearing to give directions it will give the parties at least three days' notice of the hearing: para 2.6. Courts will make arrangements to ensure that applications and other hearings are listed promptly to avoid delay in the conduct of cases: para 2.9. Where the court is proposing on its own initiative to make an order under CPR 35.15 (power to appoint an assessor: see PARA 863) it must list a directions hearing unless the parties have consented in writing to the order: Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 3.11. As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq. As to the court's power to impose sanctions see generally PARA 247.

8 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.4. When any hearing has been fixed it is the duty of the parties to consider what directions the court should be asked to give and to make any application that may be appropriate to be dealt with at that hearing: para 2.5. When making an order the court will as far as possible base its order on the forms of directions contained in Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 Appendix A in The Civil Court Practice. Agreed directions which the parties file and invite the court to make should also be based on those forms: Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.7.

9 For a typical timetable which the court may give for the preparation of the case see Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 3.12. That timetable lays down the following times running from the date of the notice of allocation: (1) disclosure, four weeks; (2) exchange of witness statements, ten weeks; (3) exchange of experts' reports, 14 weeks; (4) sending of pre-trial check lists (listing questionnaires) by the court, 20 weeks; (5) filing of completed pre-trial check lists, 22 weeks; and (6) hearing, 30 weeks: para 3.12. Where it considers that some or all of the steps in that timetable are not necessary the court may omit them and direct an earlier trial, eg where the court is informed that a pre-action protocol has been complied with or that steps which it would otherwise order to be taken have already been taken, or where an application (eg for summary judgment or for an injunction) has been heard before allocation and little or no further preparation is required. In such a case the court may dispense with the need for a pre-trial check list: para 3.13. As to the meaning of 'pre-action protocol' see PARA 13; and as to the meaning of 'injunction' see PARA 315 note 2.

10 CPR 28.2(1). Where a party needs to apply for a direction of a kind not included in the case management timetable which has been set (eg to amend his statement of case or for further information to be given by another party) he must do so as soon as possible so as to minimise the need to change that timetable: Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 2.8. At this stage the court's first concern will be to ensure that the issues between the parties be identified and that the necessary evidence is prepared and disclosed: para 3.3. It will seek to tailor its directions to the needs of the case and the steps of which it is aware that the parties have already taken to prepare the case. In particular it will have regard to the extent to which any pre-action protocol has or (as the case may be) has not been complied with: para 3.2. As to approval of agreed directions filed by the parties see paras 3.5-3.7. If the court does not approve the agreed directions filed by the parties but decides that it will give directions on its own initiative without a hearing, it will take them into account in deciding what directions to give: para 3.8. As to the court's general approach when giving directions on its own initiative see para 3.9. As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

11 See CPR 28.5(1); and PARA 290. The pre-trial check lists (in Form N170 in The Civil Court Practice) must be sent to the parties with the notice of allocation, which will state the date by which they are to be completed and returned to the court, unless it considers that the claim can proceed to trial without the need for a pre-trial check list: CPR 28.5(1).

288. Variation of directions.

A party must apply to the court¹ if he wishes to vary the date which the court has fixed in the notice of allocation for (1) the return of a pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire)²; (2) the trial³; or (3) the trial period⁴. It is essential that any party who wishes to have a direction varied takes steps to do so as soon as possible⁵. Where a party is dissatisfied with a direction given or other order made by the court he may appeal or apply to the court for it to reconsider its decision. He must appeal if the direction was given or the order was made at a hearing at which he was present or represented, or of which he had due notice, and in any other case he must apply to the court to reconsider its decision⁶.

Where the parties agree about changes to be made to the directions given, then unless the changes are to dates set by the court for the return of a pre-trial check list, the trial or the trial period⁷, and if certain other conditions are satisfied⁸, the parties need not file the written agreement⁹. In any other case the parties must apply for an order by consent¹⁰.

Where there has been a change in the circumstances since the order was made the court may set aside or vary any direction it has given, either on application or on its own initiative¹¹.

Any date set by the court or by the Civil Procedure Rules for doing any act may not be varied by the parties if the variation would make it necessary to vary any of the dates fixed for the return of a pre-trial check list, the trial or the trial period¹².

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 I.e. under CPR 28.5 (see PARA 290): see CPR 28.4(1)(a).

3 CPR 28.4(1)(b). Only in exceptional circumstances will the court order a postponement of the trial date or trial period; such an order would be one of last resort: see Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 5.4(1), (6); and PARA 289.

4 CPR 28.4(1)(c).

5 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.2(1). The court will assume for the purposes of any later application that a party who did not appeal and who made no application to vary within 14 days of service of the order containing the directions was content that they were correct in the circumstances then existing: para 4.2(2). As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

6 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.3(1)-(3). If an application is made for the court to reconsider its decision it will usually be heard by the judge who gave the directions or another judge of the same level: para 4.3(4)(a). The court will give all parties at least three days' notice of the hearing and may confirm its decision or make a different order: para 4.3(4)(b), (c).

7 I.e. the dates fixed under CPR 28.4(1): see the text and notes 1-4.

8 I.e. if CPR 2.11 (variation by agreement of a date set by the court for doing any act other than those under, inter alia, CPR 3.8 or CPR 28.4: see PARA 248) applies or if CPR 31.5 (standard disclosure: see PARA 542), CPR 31.10(8) (procedure for standard disclosure: see PARA 544) or CPR 31.13 (disclosure in stages: see PARA 548) applies: see Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.5(1).

9 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.5(1).

10 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.5(2)(a). The parties must file a draft of the order sought and an agreed statement of the reasons why the variation is sought and the court may make an order in the agreed terms or in other terms without a hearing, but it may direct that a hearing is to be listed: para 4.5(2)(b), (c).

11 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 4.4.

12 CPR 28.4(2). The dates referred to are those mentioned in CPR 28.4(1): see the text and notes 1-4.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(4) THE FAST TRACK/289. Failure to comply with case management directions.

289. Failure to comply with case management directions.

Where a party has failed to comply with a direction given by the court¹ any other party may apply for an order to enforce compliance or for a sanction to be imposed or both of these². The party entitled to apply for such an order must do so without delay but should first warn the other party of his intention to do so³.

The court will not allow a failure to comply with directions to lead to the postponement of the trial unless the circumstances of the case are exceptional⁴. If it is practicable to do so the court will exercise its powers in a manner that enables the case to come on for trial on the date or within the period previously set⁵. Where it appears that one or more issues are or can be made ready for trial at the time fixed while others cannot, the court may direct that the trial will proceed on the issues which are or will then be ready, and order that no costs will be allowed for any later trial of the remaining issues or that those costs will be paid by the party in default⁶.

Where the court has no option but to postpone the trial it will do so for the shortest possible time and will give directions for the taking of the necessary steps in the meantime as rapidly as possible⁷.

2 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 5.1.

3 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 5.2. The court may take any such delay into account when it decides whether to make an order imposing a sanction or whether to grant relief from a sanction imposed by the Civil Procedure Rules or any practice direction: para 5.3. As to sanctions generally see PARA 247 et seq.

4 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 5.4(1). Litigants and lawyers must be in no doubt that the court will regard the postponement of a trial as an order of last resort. The court may exercise its power to require a party as well as his legal representative to attend court at a hearing where such an order is to be sought: para 5.4(6). As to the meaning of 'legal representative' see PARA 1833 note 13.

5 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 5.4(2). In particular the court will assess what steps each party should take to prepare the case for trial, direct that those steps are taken in the shortest possible time and impose a sanction for non-compliance. Such a sanction may, eg, deprive a party of the right to raise or contest an issue or to rely on evidence to which the direction relates: para 5.4(3).

290. Pre-trial check lists.

The court will send the parties a pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire)¹ for completion and return by the date specified in the notice of allocation unless it considers that the claim can proceed to trial without the need for such a pre-trial check list². The date specified for filing³ a pre-trial check list will not be more than eight weeks before the trial date or the beginning of the trial period⁴. If no party files the completed pre-trial check list by the date specified, the court will order that unless a completed pre-trial check list is filed within seven days from service of that order, the claim, defence and any counterclaim will be struck out without further order of the court⁵. If:

- 454 (1) a party files a completed pre-trial check list but another party does not;
- 455 (2) a party has failed to give all the information requested by the pre-trial check list; or
- 456 (3) the court considers that a hearing is necessary to enable it to decide what directions to give in order to complete preparation of the case for trial, the court may give such directions as it thinks appropriate⁶.

1 See Form N170 in The Civil Court Practice. The pre-trial check list seeks information about the extent to which the parties have complied with the directions given by the court on allocation or otherwise, details of any expert witnesses whom the court has authorised to be called and details of other witnesses and the dates of availability of all witnesses.

2 CPR 28.5(1); and see Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 6. Although the rules do not require the parties to exchange copies of the check lists before they are filed they are encouraged to do so to avoid the court being given conflicting or incomplete information; see para 6.1(4).

3 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

5 CPR 28.5(3).

6 CPR 28.5(4). Where the judge decides to hold a listing hearing the court will fix a date which is as early as possible and the parties will be given at least three days' notice of the date. The notice of a listing hearing will be in Form N153 in The Civil Court Practice: Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 6.3. The court's general approach will be as follows, but the court may decide to make other orders, and in particular the court will take into account the steps, if any, which the parties have taken to prepare the case for trial: para 6.4. Where no party files a pre-trial check list the court will order that unless a completed pre-trial check list is filed within seven days from service of that order, the claim, defence and any counterclaim will be struck out without further order of the court: para 6.5(1). Where a party files a pre-trial check list but another party does not do so, the court normally will give directions. These will usually fix or confirm the trial date and provide for steps to be taken to prepare the case for trial: Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 6.5(2).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(4) THE FAST TRACK/291. The trial date and giving directions; conduct of fast track trial.

291. The trial date and giving directions; conduct of fast track trial.

As soon as practicable after the date specified for filing¹ a completed pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire) the court² will fix the date for the trial or, if it has already done so, confirm that date³. The court will also give any directions for the trial, including a trial timetable, which it considers appropriate⁴ and specify any further steps that need to be taken before trial⁵. The court will give the parties at least three weeks' notice of the date of the trial unless, in exceptional circumstances, the court directs that shorter notice be given⁶.

Unless the trial judge⁷ otherwise directs, the trial will be conducted in accordance with any order previously made⁸. The trial will normally take place at the court where the case is being managed, but it may be at another court if it is appropriate having regard to the needs of the parties and the availability of court resources⁹.

Where a trial is not finished on the day for which it is listed the judge will normally sit on the next court day to complete it¹⁰.

1 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 CPR 28.6(1)(a).

4 CPR 28.6(1)(b). In deciding which cases should be allocated to the fast track, the trial length is limited to one day, which, for this purpose, is a period of five hours: see CPR 26.6(4), (5); Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 9.1(3)(a); and PARA 268.

5 CPR 28.6(1)(c). The following are directions on listing which the court must give: (1) the court must confirm or fix the trial date, specify the place of trial and give a time estimate; the trial date must be fixed and the case listed on the footing that the hearing will end on the same calendar day as that on which it commenced; (2) the court will serve a notice of hearing on the parties at least three weeks before the hearing unless they agree to accept shorter notice or the court authorises shorter service under CPR 28.6(2) (see the text and note 6); and (3) the notice of hearing will be in Form N172: see Practice Direction--the Fast Track PD 28 para 7.1. Other directions which the court may give are as follows: (a) the parties should seek to agree directions and may file the proposed order; the court may make an order in those terms or it may make a different order; (b) agreed directions should include provision about evidence, a trial timetable and time estimate, the preparation of a trial bundle and any other matter needed to prepare the case for trial; (c) the court will include such of these provisions as are appropriate in any order that it may make, whether or not the parties have filed agreed directions; (d) a direction giving permission to use expert evidence will say whether it gives permission for oral evidence or reports or both and will name the experts concerned; but the court will not make a direction giving permission for an expert to give oral evidence unless it believes it is necessary in the interests of justice to do so and where no 'without prejudice' meeting or other discussion between experts has taken place the court may grant that permission conditionally on such a discussion taking place and a report being filed before the trial: para 7.2. The principles set out in para 4 about the variation of directions (see PARA 288) apply also to directions given at this stage: para 7.3. As to the meaning of 'without prejudice' see PARA 804 note 4.

6 CPR 28.6(2). The notice of hearing will be in Form N172 in The Civil Court Practice.

7 As to the meaning of 'judge' see PARA 49.

8 CPR 28.7. Such order will have been made eg as to the timetable for the trial (see PARA 287 text and note 9) or as to the method of receiving evidence (see eg CPR 32.1, CPR 32.5; and PARA 791 et seq). As to trials and their conduct generally see CPR Pt 39; and PARA 1117 et seq.

9 Practice Direction--The Fast Track PD 28 para 8.1. The judge will generally have read the papers in the trial bundle and may dispense with an opening address. He may confirm or vary any timetable given previously, or if none has been given set his own: paras 8.2, 8.3.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(4) THE FAST TRACK/292. Fast track trial costs.

292. Fast track trial costs.

The costs recoverable in respect of the preparation for and attendance at trial¹ by an advocate² are limited³ by the value of the claim, as follows:

- 457 (1) to £485, where the value of the claim is no more than £3,000;
- 458 (2) to £690, where the value of the claim is more than £3,000 but not more than £10,000;
- 459 (3) to £1,035, where the value of the claim is more than £10,000 but not more than £15,000; and
- 460 (4) to £1,650, for proceedings issued on or after 6 April 2009 where the value of the claim is more than £15,000⁴.

The court⁵ may not award more or less than the above amounts except where it decides not to award any trial costs at all or where the power to award more or less than that amount applies⁶, but it may apportion the amount awarded between the parties to reflect their respective degrees of success on the issues at trial⁷.

If, in addition to the advocate, a party's legal representative⁸ attends the trial and the court considers that it was necessary for such legal representative to attend to assist the advocate and the court awards trial costs to that party, the court may award an additional £345 in respect of the legal representative's attendance at the trial⁹.

Where the only claim is for the payment of money, then for the purpose of quantifying trial costs to be awarded to a claimant¹⁰, the value of the claim is the total amount of the judgment excluding interest and costs¹¹ and excluding any reduction made for contributory negligence¹², while for the purpose of quantifying trial costs awarded to a defendant¹³, the value of the claim is:

- 461 (a) the amount specified in the claim form (excluding interest and costs)¹⁴;
- 462 (b) if no amount is specified, the maximum amount which the claimant reasonably expected to recover according to the statement of value¹⁵ included in the claim form¹⁶; or
- 463 (c) more than £15,000, if the claim form states that the claimant cannot reasonably say how much is likely to be recovered¹⁷.

Where the claim is only for a remedy other than the payment of money the value of the claim is deemed to be more than £3,000 but not more than £10,000, unless the court orders otherwise¹⁸.

Where a defendant has made a counterclaim¹⁹ against the claimant, the counterclaim has a higher value than the claim and the claimant succeeds at trial both on the claim and the counterclaim, then for the purpose of quantifying fast track trial costs awarded to the claimant, the value of the claim is the value of the defendant's counterclaim calculated in accordance with the rules set out above²⁰.

Where the court considers that the party to whom fast track trial costs are to be awarded has behaved unreasonably or improperly during the trial, it may award that party an amount less than would otherwise be payable for that claim, as it considers appropriate²¹; and where it considers that the party who is to pay the fast track trial costs has behaved improperly during the trial the court may award such additional amount to the other party as it considers appropriate²².

1 For this purpose 'trial' includes a hearing where the court decides an amount of money or the value of goods following a judgment under CPR Pt 12 (default judgment: see PARA 506 et seq) or CPR Pt 14 (admissions: see PARA 187 et seq) but does not include the hearing of an application for summary judgment under CPR Pt 24 (see PARA 524 et seq) or the court's approval of a settlement or other compromise under CPR 21.10 (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1422): CPR 46.1(2)(c).

2 For these purposes, 'advocate' means a person exercising a right of audience as a representative of, or on behalf of, a party: CPR 46.1(2)(a). As to rights of audience see COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARAS 331, 706; and LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 65 (2008) PARA 495 et seq.

(5) THE MULTI-TRACK

293. Scope of the procedural rules for cases allocated to the multi-track.

Part 29 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ contains general provisions about management of cases allocated to the multi-track and applies only to cases allocated to that track². The hallmarks of the multi-track are the ability of the court³ to deal with cases of widely differing values and complexity and the flexibility given to the court in the way that it will manage a case in a way appropriate to its particular needs⁴.

1 Ie CPR 29; see PARA 294 et seq.

2 CPR 29.1. As to cases normally allocated to the multi-track see PARA 269. It would not be wrong or disproportionate to allocate what would ordinarily be a fast track claim, by reason of its low value, into the multi-track where the criteria for the admission of oral expert evidence are satisfied and the trial is therefore likely to last more than one day: Kearsley v Klarfeld[2005] EWCA Civ 1510, [2006] 2 All ER 303.

3 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(5) THE MULTI-TRACK/294. Case management in the multi-track.

294. Case management in the multi-track.

Case management of a claim which is proceeding at the Royal Courts of Justice will be undertaken there¹. Case management of any other claim which has been allocated to the multi-track will normally be undertaken at a civil trial centre². Case management will generally be dealt with by a master in cases proceeding in the Royal Courts of Justice, a district judge in cases proceeding in a district registry of the High Court, and a district judge or a circuit judge in cases proceeding in a county court³.

When it allocates a case to the multi-track, the court⁴ will:

- 464 (1) give directions for the management of the case and set a timetable for the steps to be taken between the giving of directions and the trial; or
- 465 (2) fix a case management conference or a pre-trial review, or both, and give such other directions relating to the management of the case as it sees fit⁵.

The court will fix the trial date or the period in which the trial is to take place as soon as practicable⁶. When the court fixes the trial date or the trial period under this provision, it will give notice to the parties of the date or period⁷ and specify the date by which the parties must file⁸ a pre-trial check list⁹.

1 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 3.1(1). A claim with an estimated value of less than £50,000 begun by claim form issued in the Central Office or Chancery Chambers in the Royal Courts of Justice will normally be transferred to a county court: see paras 2.1, 2.2. Exceptions include professional negligence claims, claims under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976, fraud or undue influence claims, defamation claims, claims for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment, claims against the police and contentious probate claims: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 2.6.

2 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 3.1(2)(a). As to civil trial centres see PARA 269. It is essential that best practice is followed throughout the country in relation to case management directions in the multi-track in the clinical negligence field: Wardlaw v Farrar [2003] EWCA Civ 1719, [2003] 4 All ER 1358n.

3 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 3.10(1). A master or a district judge may consult and seek the directions of a judge of a higher level about any aspect of case management: para 3.10(2).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(5) THE MULTI-TRACK/295. Case management conference and pre-trial review.

295. Case management conference and pre-trial review.

The court¹ may fix a case management conference or a pre-trial review at any time after the claim has been allocated². If a party wishes to make an application for an interim order³ or seeks a direction not routinely made at a case management conference, then he must issue an application notice⁴ for such an order or direction for hearing at the case management conference⁵. If a party has a legal representative⁶, a representative familiar with the case and with sufficient authority to deal with any issues that are likely to arise must attend case management conferences and pre-trial reviews⁷.

The topics the court will consider at a case management conference are likely to include:

- 466 (1) whether the claimant⁸ has made clear the claim he is bringing, in particular the amount he is claiming, so that the other party can understand the case he has to meet;
- 467 (2) whether any amendments are required to the claim, a statement of case or any other document;
- 468 (3) what disclosure⁹ of documents, if any, is necessary;
- 469 (4) what expert evidence is reasonably required¹⁰ and how and when that evidence should be obtained and disclosed;
- 470 (5) what factual evidence should be disclosed;
- 471 (6) what arrangements should be made about the giving of clarification or further information and the putting of questions to experts; and
- 472 (7) whether it will be just and will save costs to order a split trial or the trial of one or more preliminary issues¹¹.

At a case management conference the court may also consider whether the case ought to be tried by a High Court judge or by a judge who specialises in that type of claim and how that question will be decided. In that case the claim may need to be transferred to another court¹².

5 See CPR 1.4(2)(i); and Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 paras 3.5, 5.8(1), (2). A costs sanction may be imposed on a party who fails to comply with para 5.8(1) or (2): para 5.8(3).

6 As to the meaning of 'legal representative' see PARA 1833 note 13.

7 CPR 29.3(2); and see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 5.2. Where the inadequacy of the person attending or of his instructions leads to the adjournment of a hearing, the court will expect to make a wasted costs order: para 5.2(3). See also CPR 3.1(2)(c), which provides that the court may require a party to attend court for a hearing; and PARA 247. The wasted costs jurisdiction is concerned not only with providing a sanction in costs against those whose conduct has been shown to be improper, negligent or unreasonable, but also with compensating those who in consequence have been put to unnecessary expense: see Medcalf v Mardell (No 2) [2000] All ER (D) 1969, [2001] CPLR 140, CA. As to wasted costs orders see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 879 et seq.

8 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

9 As to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538.

10 le in accordance with CPR 35.1: see PARA 838. The court will not at this stage give permission to use expert evidence unless it can identify each expert by name or field in its order and say whether his evidence is to be given orally or by the use of his report. A party who obtains expert evidence before obtaining a direction about it does so at his own risk as to costs, except where he obtained the evidence in compliance with a pre-action protocol: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 5.5. As to the meaning of 'pre-action protocol' see PARA 13.

11 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 5.3. Where an issue has been resolved by a case management conference and a subsequent case management conference is fixed, it is inappropriate for a party to re-open the issue at the subsequent case management conference: Jameson v Personal Representatives of Smith (deceased) [2001] EWCA Civ 1264, [2001] 6 CPLR 489. As to the use of video conferencing in relation to the holding of case management conferences and pre-trial reviews see Practice Direction--Written Evidence PD 32 para 29.1, Annex 3; and PARAS 1033-1035.

12 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 5.9.

296. Directions proposed by the parties.

If the parties agree proposals for the management of the proceedings, including a proposed trial date or period in which the trial is to take place, and the court¹ considers that the proposals are suitable, it may approve them without a hearing and give directions in the terms proposed². To obtain the court's approval the agreed directions must:

- 473 (1) set out a timetable by reference to calendar dates for the taking of steps for the preparation of the case³;
- 474 (2) include a date or a period (the trial period) when it is proposed that the trial will take place;
- 475 (3) include provision about disclosure of documents⁴; and
- 476 (4) include provision about both factual and expert evidence⁵.

Directions agreed by the parties should also where appropriate contain provisions about:

- 477 (a) the filing⁶ of any reply or amended statement of case that may be required;
- 478 (b) dates for the service of requests for further information⁷ and of questions to experts⁸ and by when they are to be dealt with;
- 479 (c) the disclosure of evidence;
- 480 (d) the use of a single joint expert, or in cases where it is not agreed, the exchange of expert evidence⁹ and without prejudice discussions between experts¹⁰.

If the court does not approve the agreed directions filed by the parties but decides that it will give directions of its own initiative without fixing a case management conference, it will take them into account in deciding what directions to give¹¹.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 29.4. The parties and their advisers are encouraged to try to agree directions: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.6.

3 The court will scrutinise the timetable carefully and in particular will be concerned to see that any proposed date or period for the trial and (if provided for) for a case management conference is no later than is reasonably necessary: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.7(2).

4 The provision may limit disclosure to standard disclosure or less than that, and/or direct that disclosure will take place by the supply of copy documents without a list, but it must in that case say either that the parties must serve a disclosure statement with the copies or that they have agreed to disclose in that way without such a statement: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.7(3). As to the meaning of 'standard disclosure' see PARA 542.

5 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.7(1). The provision about expert evidence may be to the effect that none is required: para 4.7(4).

6 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

7 Ie under Practice Direction--Further Information PD 18: see PARAS 611-612. As to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

8 Ie under CPR 35.6: see PARA 857.

9 le including whether exchange is to be simultaneous or sequential: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.8(4).

10 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.8.

11 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.9. Where the court is to give directions on its own initiative without holding a case management conference and it is not aware of any steps taken by the parties other than the exchange of statements of case, its general approach will be (1) to give directions for the filing and service of any further information required to clarify either party's case; (2) to direct standard disclosure between the parties; (3) to direct the disclosure of witness statements by way of simultaneous exchange; (4) to give directions for a single joint expert on any appropriate issue unless there is a good reason not to do so; (5) unless para 4.11 applies, to direct disclosure of experts' reports by way of simultaneous exchange on those issues where a single joint expert is not directed; (6) if experts' reports are not agreed, to direct a discussion between experts for the purpose set out in CPR 35.12(1) and the preparation of a statement under CPR 35.12(3) (see PARA 860); (7) to list a case management conference to take place after the date for compliance with those directions; (8) to specify a trial period; and (9) in such cases as the court thinks appropriate, to give directions requiring the parties to consider alternative dispute resolution ('ADR'): Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.10. If it appears that expert evidence will be required both on issues of liability and on the amount of damages, the court may direct that the exchange of those reports that relate to liability will be simultaneous but that those relating to the amount of damages will be sequential: para 4.11. If it appears to the court that it cannot properly give directions on its own initiative and no agreed directions have been filed which it can approve, the court will direct a case management conference to be listed and the conference will be listed as promptly as possible: para 4.12. Where the court is proposing on its own initiative to make an order under CPR 35.7 (which gives the court power to direct that evidence on a particular issue is to be given by a single expert: see PARA 840) or under CPR 35.15 (which gives the court power to appoint an assessor: see PARA 863), the court must, unless the parties have consented in writing to the order, list a case management conference: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 4.13. As to case management conferences see PARA 295.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(5) THE MULTI-TRACK/297. Variation of directions.

297. Variation of directions.

A party must apply to the court¹ if he wishes to vary the date which the court has fixed for (1) a case management conference²; (2) a pre-trial review³; (3) the return of a pre-trial check list⁴; (4) the trial⁵; or (5) the trial period⁶. It is essential that any party who wishes to have a direction varied takes steps to do so as soon as possible⁷.

Where a party is dissatisfied with a direction given or other order made by the court he may appeal or apply to the court for it to reconsider its decision⁸. A party should seek permission to appeal if the direction was given or the order was made at a hearing at which he was present, or of which he had due notice, and in any other case he should apply to the court to reconsider its decision⁹.

Where the parties agree about changes to be made to the directions given, then unless the changes are to dates set by the court for a case management conference, a pre-trial review, the return of a pre-trial check list, the trial or the trial period¹⁰, and if certain other conditions are satisfied¹¹, the parties need not file the written agreement¹². In any other case the parties must apply for an order by consent¹³.

Where there has been a change in the circumstances since the order was made the court may set aside or vary any direction it has given, either on application or on its own initiative¹⁴.

Any date set by the court or by the Civil Procedure Rules for doing any act may not be varied by the parties if the variation would make it necessary to vary any of the dates fixed for a case management conference, a pre-trial review, the return of a pre-trial check list, the trial or the trial period¹⁵.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 29.5(1)(a). A case management conference will only be postponed for a very good reason, which will not include a failure to comply with a direction already given: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.4(7).

3 CPR 29.5(1)(b). A pre-trial review will only be postponed for a very good reason, which will not include a failure to comply with a direction already given: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.4(7).

4 I.e. under CPR 29.6 (see PARA 299): see CPR 29.5(1)(c).

5 CPR 29.5(1)(d). Only in exceptional circumstances will the court order a postponement of the trial date or trial period; such an order would be one of last resort: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.4(1), (6).

6 CPR 29.5(1)(e).

7 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.2(1). The court will assume for the purposes of any later application that a party who did not appeal, and who made no application to vary within 14 days of service of the order containing the directions, was content that they were correct in the circumstances then existing: para 6.2(2). As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

8 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.3(1).

9 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.3(2), (3). If an application is made for the court to reconsider its decision it will usually be heard by the judge who gave the directions or another judge of the same level. The court will give all parties at least three days' notice of the hearing and may confirm its directions or make a different order: para 6.3(4). As to permission to appeal case management decisions see Practice Direction--Appeals PD 52 paras 4.4, 4.5; and PARA 1661.

10 See the text and notes 1-6.

11 Ie if CPR 2.11 (variation by agreement of a date set by the court for doing any act other than those under, inter alia, CPR 3.8 or CPR 29.5: see PARA 248) applies or if CPR 31.5, CPR 31.10(8) or CPR 31.13 (agreements about disclosure: see PARAS 542, 544, 548) applies: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.5(1).

12 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.5(1).

13 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.5(2)(a). The parties must file a draft of the order sought and an agreed statement of the reasons why the variation is sought and the court may make an order in the agreed terms or in other terms without a hearing, but it may direct that a hearing is to be listed: para 6.5(2)(b), (c).

14 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 6.4.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(5) THE MULTI-TRACK/298. Failure to comply with case management directions.

298. Failure to comply with case management directions.

Where a party fails to comply with a direction given by the court¹ any other party may apply for an order that he must do so, or for a sanction to be imposed, or both of these². The party entitled to apply for such an order must do so without delay³ but must first warn the other party of his intention to do so⁴.

The court will not allow a failure to comply with directions to lead to the postponement of the trial unless the circumstances are exceptional⁵. If it is practical to do so the court will exercise its powers in a manner that enables the case to come on for trial on the date or within the period previously set⁶. Where it appears that one or more issues are or can be made ready for trial at the time fixed while others cannot, the court may direct that the trial will proceed on the issues which are then ready, and direct that no costs will be allowed for any later trial of the remaining issues or that those costs will be paid by the party in default⁷.

Where the court has no option but to postpone the trial it will do so for the shortest possible time and will give directions for the taking of the necessary steps in the meantime as rapidly as possible⁸.

The court will not postpone any other hearing without a very good reason, and for that purpose the failure of a party to comply on time with directions previously given will not be treated as a good reason⁹.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.1. See Watford Petroleum Ltd v Interoil Trading SA [2005] All ER (D) 323 (Feb). As to the court's power to impose sanctions generally see PARA 247 et seq.

3 The court may take any such delay into account when it decides whether to make an order imposing a sanction or to grant relief from a sanction imposed by the Civil Procedure Rules or any other practice direction: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.3.

4 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.2.

Litigants and lawyers must be in no doubt that the court will regard the postponement of a trial as an order of last resort. Where it appears inevitable the court may exercise its power to require a party as well as his legal representative to attend court at the hearing where such an order is to be sought: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.4(6). As to the meaning of 'legal representative' see PARA 1833 note 13.

6 Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 7.4(2). In particular the court will assess what steps each party should take to prepare the case for trial, direct that those steps are taken in the shortest possible time and impose a sanction for non-compliance. Such a sanction may, for example, deprive a party of the right to raise or contest an issue or to rely on evidence to which the direction relates: para 7.4(3).

299. Pre-trial check list.

The court will send the parties a pre-trial check list (listing questionnaire)¹ for completion and return by the date specified in directions² unless it considers that the claim can proceed to trial³ without the need for a pre-trial check list⁴. Each party must file⁵ the completed pre-trial check list by the date specified by the court⁶. If no party files the completed pre-trial check list by the date specified, the court will order that unless a completed pre-trial check list is filed within seven days from service of that order, the claim, defence and any counterclaim will be struck out without further order of the court⁷.

If:

- 481 (1) a party files a completed pre-trial check list but another party does not;
- 482 (2) a party has failed to give all the information requested by the pre-trial check list; or the court may give such directions as it thinks appropriate⁸.
- 483 (3) the court considers that a hearing is necessary to enable it to decide what directions to give in order to complete preparation of the case for trial,

1 See Form N170 in The Civil Court Practice. The pre-trial check list seeks information about the extent to which the parties have complied with the directions given by the court on allocation or otherwise, details of any expert witnesses whom the court has authorised to be called and details of other witnesses and the dates of availability of all witnesses. Although the rules do not require the parties to exchange copies of the questionnaires before they are filed they are encouraged to do so to avoid the court being given conflicting or incomplete information. The file will be placed before a judge for his directions when all the check lists have been filed or when the time for filing them has expired and where a party has filed a check list but another party has not done so: see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 8.1(1), (5), (6). Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 paras 8, 9 do not apply in the Technology and Construction Court: see PARA 1546.

2 As given under CPR 29.2(3) (see PARA 294): see CPR 29.6(1).

3 As to directions on listing see Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 9. On listing, the court must fix the trial date or week, give a time estimate and fix the place of trial: para 9.1. The parties should seek to agree directions and may file an agreed order. The court may make an order in those terms or it may make a different order: para 9.2(1). Agreed directions should include provision about: (1) evidence especially expert evidence; (2) a trial timetable and time estimate; (3) the preparation of a trial bundle; and (4) any other matter needed to prepare the case for trial: para 9.2(2). The court will include such of these provisions as are appropriate in any order that it may make, whether or not the parties have filed agreed directions: para 9.2(3). Unless a direction doing so has been given before, a direction giving permission to use expert evidence will say whether it gives permission to use oral evidence or reports or both and will name the experts concerned: para 9.2(4). The principles set out in para 6 (see PARA 297) about variation of directions apply equally to directions given at this stage: para 9.3.

4 CPR 29.6(1).

5 As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

6 CPR 29.6(2).

7 CPR 29.6(3).

8 CPR 29.6(4). The court's general approach will be as set out below; the court may, however, decide to make other orders, and in particular the court will take into account the steps, if any, of which it is aware which the parties have taken to prepare the case for trial: Practice Direction--The Multi-track PD 29 para 8.2. Where no party files a pre-trial check list the court will order that unless a completed pre-trial check list is filed within seven days from service of that order, the claim, defence and any counterclaim will be struck out without further order of the court: para 8.3(1). Where a party files a pre-trial check list but another party (the defaulting party) does not do so, the court will fix a listing hearing. Whether or not the defaulting party attends the hearing, the court will normally fix or confirm the trial date and make other orders about the steps to be taken to prepare the case for trial: para 8.3(2). Where the court decides to hold a listing hearing the court will fix a date which is as early as possible and the parties will be given at least three days' notice of the date: para 8.4. Where the court decides to hold a pre-trial review (whether or not this is in addition to a listing hearing) the court will give the parties at least seven days' notice of the date: para 8.5.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/9. CASE MANAGEMENT/(5) THE MULTI-TRACK/300. Pre-trial review.

300. Pre-trial review.

If, on receipt of the parties' pre-trial check lists, the court¹ decides to hold a pre-trial review or to cancel a pre-trial review which has already been fixed, it will serve² notice of its decision at least seven days before the date fixed for the hearing or, as the case may be, the cancelled hearing³.

301. Setting a trial timetable and fixing or confirming the trial date or week; conduct of trial.

As soon as practicable after each party has filed¹ a completed pre-trial check list, the court² has held a listing hearing³ or the court has held a pre-trial review⁴, the court will:

- 484 (1) set a timetable for the trial unless a timetable has already been fixed, or the court considers that it would be inappropriate to do so;
- 485 (2) fix the date for the trial or the week within which the trial is to begin (or, if it has already done so, confirm that date); and
- 486 (3) notify the parties of the trial timetable (where one is fixed under this provision) and the date or trial period⁵.

Unless the trial judge⁶ otherwise directs, the trial will be conducted in accordance with any order previously made⁷. The trial will normally take place at a civil trial centre but it may be at another court if it is appropriate having regard to the needs of the parties and the availability of court resources⁸. The judge will generally have read the papers in the trial bundle and may dispense with an opening address⁹. Once the trial of a multi-track claim has begun, the judge will normally sit on consecutive court days until it has been concluded¹⁰.

10. APPLICATIONS

303. Applications in general.

Where a party, or a non-party, needs to seek a decision, a remedy or permission from the court in connection with proceedings, the process is called an application, although this is not a technical term¹. There are a great variety of circumstances in which an application may be made, and the general procedure for applications is contained in Part 23 of the Civil Procedure Rules². In many cases the rules themselves specifically require that an application must be made³, or may be made⁴, under Part 23, or a practice direction may so specify⁵. If no procedure is prescribed, then the application will also generally be governed by Part 23; for example, applications for extension of time, for permission to take steps, or for case management directions⁶.

Some applications are not governed by Part 23⁷, while others specify modifications of the general procedure⁸.

1 An application is made by an application notice, which is defined as a document in which the applicant states his intention to seek a court order: CPR 23.1.

2 As to CPR Pt 23 see PARA 304 et seq.

3 Eg an application for judgment without trial after striking out in certain instances (see CPR 3.5(5); and PARA 521), an application in relation to the supply of court documents (see CPR 5.4C(5), 5.4D(1); and PARA 82), an application to withdraw a pre-action admission or to enter judgment on such an admission (see CPR 14.1A(5); and PARA 188), an application for permission to continue a derivative claim (see CPR 19.9A(2); and PARA 232), an application for a warrant of arrest under the Housing Act 1996 s 155(3) or the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 s 3(3) (see CPR 65.5(1), 65.29(1); and TORT vol 45(2) (Reissue) PARA 457).

4 Eg an application for an order under the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 s 27 in respect of money due from the Crown (see CPR 66.7(3); and PARA 1429), an order of reference to the European Court (see CPR 68.2(1)(b); and PARA 1725).

5 Eg all applications made before a claim is commenced should be made under CPR Pt 23 (see Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 5); an application by a receiver for directions may be made by filing an application notice in accordance with CPR Pt 23 (see Practice Direction--Court's Power to Appoint a Receiver PD 69 para 8.1; and RECEIVERS); an application to set aside an order for transfer must be made in accordance with CPR Pt 23 (see Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 6.2; and PARA 70).

6 See eg CPR 3.3(1); and PARA 35.

7 Eg CPR Pt 23 does not apply to applications relating to derogating control orders under the Prevention of Terrorism Act 2005: CPR 76.3(2); see PARA 1533; and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 506 et seq.

8 Eg CPR 12.4(2) (requirement to provide defendant's date of birth on application for default judgment in certain cases: see PARA 508); CPR 77.3 (applications by third parties to make representations and applications to vary or discharge a serious crime prevention order must be made in accordance with Pt 23 as modified by Practice Direction--Applications for and Relating to Serious Crime Prevention Orders PD 77; see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 350-359); Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 2 specifying requirements for the application notice for an interim injunction. See also Practice Direction--Applications under Particular Statutes PD 23B, dealing with applications under the Family Law Reform Act 1969 Pt III (ss 20-25) for the use of scientific tests to determine parentage (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 113 et seq), and applications in proceedings under the National Debt Act 1870 s 55 (see FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS vol 49 (2008) PARA 1346).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/10. APPLICATIONS/304. Where to make an application.

304. Where to make an application.

The general rule is that an application must be made to the court¹ where the claim was started². If a claim has been transferred to another court since it was started, an application must be made to the court to which the claim has been transferred³. If the parties have been notified of a fixed date for the trial, an application must be made to the court where the trial is to take place⁴, while if an application is made before a claim has been started, it must be made to the court where it is likely that the claim to which the application relates will be started unless there is good reason to make the application to a different court⁵.

If an application is made after proceedings to enforce judgment have begun, it must be made to any court which is dealing with the enforcement of the judgment unless any rule or practice direction provides otherwise⁶.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22. As to the appropriate court in which to commence proceedings see PARA 116.

2 CPR 23.2(1).

3 CPR 23.2(2). If, however, the application is for an order setting aside the order for transfer, it must be made to the court which ordered the transfer: Practice Direction--Transfer PD 30 para 6.1. As to the transfer of proceedings see PARA 66 et seq.

4 CPR 23.2(3). The court may specify the place (eg, a particular county court) where the trial or some other hearing in any proceedings is to be held and may do so without ordering the proceedings to be transferred: see CPR 30.6; and PARA 71.

6 CPR 23.2(5).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/10. APPLICATIONS/305. Time for making an application.

305. Time for making an application.

Every application must be made as soon as it becomes apparent that it is necessary or desirable to make it¹. As part of the court's duty to further the overriding objective² by actively managing cases, the court will deal with as many aspects of a case as it can on the same occasion³. Accordingly, wherever possible, applications must be made so that they can be considered at any other hearing for which a date has already been or is about to be fixed, particularly where the hearing is to be a case management conference, allocation or listing hearing or a pre-trial review⁴. Where a date for a hearing has been fixed and a party wishes to make an application at that hearing, but there is insufficient time for service of the application notice⁵, he should inform the other party and the court, if possible in writing, as soon as he can of the nature of the application and the reason for it. He should then make the application orally at the hearing⁶.

Where an application is required to be made within a specified time, it is so made if the application notice is received by the court within that time⁷.

1 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.7.

2 As to the overriding objective see PARA 33. As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

3 See CPR 1.4(2)(i); and PARA 246. Moreover, at the hearing of any application, in discharge of this duty, the court may wish to review the conduct of the case as a whole and give any necessary case management directions. The parties are therefore required to be ready to assist the court in doing so and to answer questions the court may ask for this purpose: see Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.9.

4 See Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.8. As to case management conferences and pre-trial reviews see PARAS 294-295; and as to allocation and listing hearings see PARAS 266, 299. As to the limited application of para 2.8 in the Commercial Court see PARA 1541 note 3.

5 As to service of the application notice see PARA 307; and as to the contents of the application notice see PARA 306. As to the meaning of 'application notice' see PARA 303 note 1.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/10. APPLICATIONS/306. The application notice; in general.

306. The application notice; in general.

The general rule is that an applicant must file¹ an application notice². An applicant may, however, make an application without filing an application notice if this is permitted by a rule or practice direction³ or the court⁴ dispenses with the requirement for an application notice⁵.

An application notice must state what order the applicant is seeking⁶ and, briefly, why the applicant is seeking the order⁷.

If the applicant wishes to rely on matters set out in his application notice as evidence, the notice must be verified by a statement of truth⁸.

On receipt of an application notice containing a request for a hearing the court will notify the applicant of the time and date for the hearing of the application⁹. If the notice contains a request that the application be dealt with without a hearing, it will be sent to a master or district judge so that he may decide whether the application is suitable for consideration without a hearing¹⁰. Where the master or district judge agrees that the application is suitable for such consideration, the court will so inform the applicant and the respondent¹¹ and may give directions for the filing of evidence¹². Where, however, the master or district judge does not agree that the application is suitable for such consideration, the court will notify the applicant and the respondent of the time, date and place for the hearing of the application and may at the same time give directions as to the filing of evidence¹³.

6 CPR 23.6(a). Forms N244 and PF244 in The Civil Court Practice for application notices (the latter for use in the Royal Courts of Justice) contemplate that the applicant will provide a draft of the order sought (since the forms state that the applicant 'intends to apply for an order (a draft of which is attached)'); see also CPR 23.7(3) (b) (copy of any draft to be served with the notice and evidence); and PARA 307. Except in the most simple application, the applicant must bring a draft of the order to the hearing: see Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 12.1. If the case is proceeding in the Royal Courts of Justice and the order is unusually long or complex it must also be supplied on disk for use by the court office: para 12.1.

7 CPR 23.6(b). The notice must be signed and must include (1) the title of the claim; (2) the reference number of the claim; (3) the full name of the applicant; (4) where the applicant is not already a party, his address for service, including a postcode; and (5) either a request for a hearing or a request that the application be dealt with without a hearing: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.1. If the application is intended to be made to a judge, the application notice must so state: para 2.6.

8 See CPR Pt 22; and PARA 613 et seq.

9 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.2. Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A paras 2.2-2.6 do not apply in the Commercial Court: see PARA 1541 note 3.

10 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.3. As to applications without a hearing see PARA 308. A master or district judge may refer to a judge any matter which he thinks should properly be decided by a judge, and the judge may either dispose of the matter or refer it back to the master or district judge: para 1. If the application notice states that the application is intended to be made to a judge, paras 2.3-2.5 apply as though references to the master or district judge were references to a judge: para 2.6. As to the meaning of 'judge' see PARA 49. Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 1 does not apply in the Commercial Court: see PARA 1541 note 3. See also note 9.

12 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.4. This does not apply in the Commercial Court: see note 9.

13 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 2.5. This does not apply in the Commercial Court: see note 9. As to hearings generally see PARAS 6, 1117 et seq; and as to evidence see PARA 749 et seq.

307. Giving notice of an application.

The general rule is that a copy of the application notice¹ must be served² on each respondent³. An application may, however, be made without serving a copy of the application notice if this is permitted by a rule⁴, a practice direction⁵ or a court order⁶. Such circumstances include:

- 487 (1) where there is exceptional urgency;
- 488 (2) where the overriding objective⁷ is best furthered by doing so;
- 489 (3) by consent of all parties;
- 490 (4) with the permission of the court⁸;
- 491 (5) where a date for a hearing has been fixed and a party wishes to make an application at that hearing, but there is insufficient time for service of the notice; or
- 492 (6) where a court order, rule or practice direction permits⁹.

A copy of the application notice must be served as soon as practicable after it is filed¹⁰ and, except where another time limit is specified in the Civil Procedure Rules or in a practice direction, must in any event be served at least three days before the court is to deal with the application¹¹. If a copy of the application notice is to be served by the court, the applicant must, when he files the application notice, file a copy of any written evidence in support¹².

When a copy of an application notice is served it must be accompanied by a copy of any written evidence in support¹³ and a copy of any draft order which the applicant has attached to his application¹⁴.

If an application notice is served but the period of notice is shorter than the period required by the rules or a practice direction, the court may direct that, in the circumstances of the case, sufficient notice has been given and hear the application¹⁵.

10 CPR 23.7(1)(a). Where a notice must be served, but there is insufficient time to do so, informal notification should be given unless the circumstances of the application require secrecy: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 4.2. As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8.

11 CPR 23.7(1)(b); and see Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 4.1. This time period does not apply in the Commercial Court: see PARA 1541 note 3. As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq.

12 CPR 23.7(2). CPR 23.7 does not, however, require written evidence to be filed if it has already been filed or to be served on a party on whom it has already been served: CPR 23.7(5). Form N244 Pts B, C and Form PF244 Pts B, C (forms for application notices: see PARA 306 note 6) provide for the applicant to give details of the documents containing the evidence upon which he intends to rely: see The Civil Court Practice. The requirement for evidence in certain types of applications is set out in some of the rules and practice directions. Where there is no specific requirement to provide evidence it should be borne in mind that, as a practical matter, the court will often need to be satisfied by evidence of the facts that are relied on in support of or for opposing the application: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 9.1. The court may give directions for the filing of evidence in support of or opposing a particular application. The court may also give directions for the filing of evidence in relation to any hearing that it fixes on its own initiative. The directions may specify the form that evidence is to take and when it is to be served: para 9.2. Where it is intended to rely on evidence which is not contained in the application itself, the evidence, if it has not already been served, should be served with the application: para 9.3. Evidence should be filed with the court as well as served on the parties. Exhibits should not be filed unless the court otherwise directs: para 9.6. The contents of an application notice may be used as evidence (otherwise than at trial) provided the contents have been verified by a statement of truth: para 9.7. As to statements of truth see CPR Pt 22; and PARA 613 et seq. As to the application of Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A in the Commercial Court see PARA 1541.

Where a respondent to an application wishes to rely on evidence which has not yet been served he should serve it as soon as possible and in any event in accordance with any directions the court may have given: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 9.4. If it is necessary for the applicant to serve any evidence in reply it should be served as soon as possible and in any event in accordance with any directions the court may have given: para 9.5.

308. Applications which may be dealt with without a hearing.

The court¹ may deal with an application without a hearing if:

- 493 (1) the parties agree as to the terms of the order sought²;
- 494 (2) the parties agree that the court is to dispose of the application without a hearing³; or
- 495 (3) the court does not consider that a hearing would be appropriate⁴.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 23.8(a). As to the circumstances where an agreed judgment or order may be entered and sealed see CPR 40.6; and PARA 1141. Where all parties affected by an order have written to the court consenting to the making of the order a draft of which has been filed with the court, the court will treat the draft as having been signed in accordance with CPR 40.6(7): Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 10.2. Where a consent order must be made by a judge (ie where CPR 40.6(2) does not apply: see PARA 1141) the order must be drawn so that the judge's name and judicial title can be inserted: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 10.3. The parties to an application for a consent order must ensure that they provide the court with any material it needs to be satisfied that it is appropriate to make the order. Subject to any rule or practice direction a letter will generally be acceptable for this purpose: para 10.4. Where a judgment or order has been agreed in respect of an application or claim where a hearing date has been fixed, the parties must inform the court immediately: para 10.5. The case management timetable cannot be varied by written agreement of the parties: see CPR 28.4, CPR 29.5; and PARAS 288, 297.

3 CPR 23.8(b). The parties should inform the court in writing that they agree that the court is to dispose of the application without a hearing and confirm that all the evidence and other material on which they rely has been disclosed to the other parties: Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 11.1. As to evidence see PARA 307 notes 12, 13.

4 CPR 23.8(c). In furthering the overriding objective by actively managing cases the court may deal with the case without the parties needing to attend at court: see CPR 1.4(2)(j); and PARA 246. In these circumstances the court will treat the application as if it were proposing to make an order of its own initiative (ie under CPR 3.3, with the consequences set out in that rule: see PARA 251): see Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 11.2. As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

309. Telephone hearings.

With certain exceptions, at a telephone conference enabled court¹ allocation hearings, listing hearings and interim applications, case management conferences and pre-trial reviews with a time estimate of no more than one hour, will be conducted by telephone unless the court otherwise orders². This will not apply where the hearing is of an application made without notice to the other party, all the parties are unrepresented or more than four parties³ wish to make representations at the hearing⁴. A request for a direction that such a hearing should not be conducted by telephone must be made at least seven days before the hearing or such shorter time as the court may permit and may be made by letter, and the court must determine such request without requiring the attendance of the parties⁵.

The court may order that an application or part of an application other than one falling within the categories above be dealt with by a telephone hearing⁶. The applicant should indicate on his application notice if he seeks such a court order and where he has not done so but nevertheless wishes to seek an order the request should be made as early as possible⁷. An order for a telephone hearing will not normally be made unless every party entitled to be given notice of the application⁸ and to be heard at the hearing has consented to the order⁹.

No party, or representative of a party, to an application being heard by telephone may attend the judge in person while the application is being heard unless every other party to the application has agreed that he may do so¹⁰.

310. Application to stay claim where there are related criminal proceedings.

An application for the stay¹ of civil proceedings pending the determination of related criminal proceedings may be made by any party to the civil proceedings or by the prosecutor or any defendant in the criminal proceedings². In order to make such an application, it is not necessary for the prosecutor or defendant in the criminal proceedings to be joined as a party to the civil proceedings³. However, every party to the civil proceedings must, unless he is the applicant, be made a respondent to the application⁴.

The evidence in support of the application⁵ must contain an estimate of the expected duration of the stay and must identify the respects in which the continuance of the civil proceedings may prejudice the criminal trial⁶.

311. Service of application where application made without notice.

Where the court¹ has disposed of an application which it permitted to be made without service² of a copy of the application notice³, and the court makes an order either granting or dismissing the application, a copy of the application notice and any evidence in support⁴ must, unless the court orders otherwise, be served, with the order, on any party or other person against whom the order was made and against whom the order was sought⁵. 312. Application to set aside or vary order made without notice.

A person who was not served¹ with a copy of the application notice² before an order was made without notice³ may apply to have the order set aside⁴ or varied⁵ and notice of his right to do so must be contained in the order⁶. Such an application must be made within seven days after the date on which the order was served on the person making the application⁷.

313. Court's power to proceed in the absence of a party.

Where the applicant or any respondent¹ fails to attend the hearing of an application, the court² may proceed in his absence³. Where the applicant or any respondent fails to attend the hearing of an application and the court makes an order at the hearing, the court may, on application or of its own initiative, re-list the application⁴. This power to re-list the application is in addition to any other powers of the court with regard to the order⁵.

2 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

4 CPR 23.11(2). As to service of orders see CPR 40.4, CPR 40.5; and PARA 1140. Where the court makes an order which does not mention costs, the general rule is that no party is entitled to costs or to seek an order under the Legal Services Act 2007 s 194(3) (see PARA 1824) in relation to that order, but this does not affect any entitlement of a party to recover costs out of a fund held by that party as trustee or personal representative, or pursuant to any lease, mortgage or other security: CPR 44.13(1). Where the court makes (1) an order granting permission to appeal; (2) an order granting permission to apply for judicial review; or (3) any other order or direction sought by a party on an application without notice, and its order does not mention costs, it will be deemed to include an order for applicant's costs in the case: CPR 44.13(1A). Any party affected by a deemed order for costs under CPR 44.13(1A) may apply at any time to vary the order: CPR 44.13(1B). See PARA 1756. As to costs generally see PARA 1729 et seq.

5 Practice Direction--Applications PD 23A para 12.2. The other powers referred to are the powers eg to set aside, vary, discharge or suspend the order. As to the meaning of 'set aside' see PARA 197 note 6. The court has a very flexible power under CPR 23.11 to set aside an order and order a re-hearing where the order was made in the absence of a party. There is no fetter on the court's discretion. It would, however, be very rare for the court to exercise the power if it was satisfied that there was no real prospect of a different order being made: Riverpath Ltd v Brammell [2000] All ER (D) 99 per Neuberger J.

314. Dismissal of applications totally without merit.

If the court¹ dismisses an application (including an application for permission to appeal or for permission to apply for judicial review) and it considers that the application is totally without merit, the court's order must record that fact and the court must at the same time consider whether it is appropriate to make a civil restraint order².

¹ As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

² CPR 23.12. As to civil restraint orders see PARA 259. Where a series of claims have been instituted, a civil restraint order may be made in appropriate circumstances notwithstanding the fact that some of the claims have merit: Thakerar v Lynch Hall & Hornby [2005] EWHC 2751 (Ch), [2006] 1 WLR 1511.

11. INTERIM REMEDIES

315. Orders for interim remedies.

The court¹ may grant the following interim remedies:

- 496 (1) an interim injunction²;
- 497 (2) an interim declaration³;
- 498 (3) an order:

- 1. (a) for the detention, custody or preservation of relevant property⁴;
- 2. (b) for the inspection of relevant property⁵;
- 3. (c) for the taking of a sample of relevant property⁶;
- 4. (d) for the carrying out of an experiment on or with relevant property⁷;
- 5. (e) for the sale of relevant property which is of a perishable nature or which for any other good reason it is desirable to sell quickly⁸; and
- 6. (f) for the payment of income from relevant property until a claim is decided⁹;

- 499 (4) an order authorising a person to enter any land or building in the possession of a party to the proceedings for the purposes of carrying out an order under head (3) above¹⁰;
- 500 (5) an order under the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977¹¹ to deliver up goods¹²;
- 501 (6) an order (a freezing injunction) restraining a party from removing from the jurisdiction¹³ assets located there¹⁴ or restraining a party from dealing with any assets whether located within the jurisdiction or not¹⁵;
- 502 (7) an order directing a party to provide information about the location of relevant property or assets or to provide information about relevant property or assets which are or may be the subject of an application for a freezing injunction¹⁶;
- 503 (8) an order (a search order) under the Civil Procedure Act 1997¹⁷ requiring a party to admit another party to premises for the purpose of securing or preserving relevant property or evidence¹⁸;
- 504 (9) an order for disclosure of documents or inspection of property before a claim has been made¹⁹;
- 505 (10) an order for disclosure of documents or inspection of property against a non-party²⁰;
- 506 (11) an order (an order for interim payment²¹) for payment by a defendant²² on account of any damages²³, debt or other sum (except costs) which the court may hold the defendant liable to pay²⁴;
- 507 (12) an order for a specified fund to be paid into court or otherwise secured, where there is a dispute over a party's right to the fund²⁵;
- 508 (13) an order permitting a party seeking to recover personal property to pay money into court pending the outcome of the proceedings and directing that, if he does so, the property must be given up to him²⁶;
- 509 (14) an order directing a party to prepare and file²⁷ accounts relating to the dispute²⁸;
- 510 (15) an order directing any account to be taken or inquiry to be made by the court²⁹; and 511 (16) an order³⁰ in intellectual property proceedings making the continuation of an alleged infringement subject to the lodging of guarantees³¹.

The fact that a particular kind of interim remedy is not listed above does not affect any power that the court may have to grant that remedy³². The court may grant an interim remedy whether or not there has been a claim for a final remedy of that kind³³.

The factors to be taken into account by the court before making an interim order for the delivery up of goods include clear evidence that the defendant is likely to dispose of the goods unless restrained by the court and some evidence of wrongdoing by the defendant: CBS United Kingdom Ltd v Lambert [1983] Ch 37, [1982] 3 All ER 237, CA. The words 'his assets and/or funds' in the standard form of freezing order are not apt to cover assets and funds which belong, or are assumed to belong, beneficially to someone other than the person restrained. Rather, they are confined to assets and funds belonging to the defendant, and which are and should remain available to satisfy the claim against him. Such a construction is consistent both with everyday usage of the term 'his assets' and with the purpose of a freezing order. However, the court can make an appropriately worded order to cover assets and funds which might not belong beneficially to the defendant; eg, the order could refer to bank accounts 'in the name of' the person restrained or preferably to bank accounts identified by number and branch. Such accounts will then be caught by the order, even if it is discovered after fuller inquiry on notice that the assets belong beneficially to a third party and that the order therefore has to be modified or discharged: see Federal Bank of the Middle East Ltd v Hadkinson [2000] 2 All ER 395, [2000] CPLR 295, CA.

NOTES 19, 20--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

NOTE 24--Ee/es, cited, reported at [2010] 1 WLR 409.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/11. INTERIM REMEDIES/316. Interim injunctions; in general.

316. Interim injunctions; in general.

Interim injunctions¹ are generally granted only when the applicant has established a serious issue to be tried, damages will not be an adequate remedy, and the balance of convenience² lies in favour of granting the injunction in that it will do more good than harm and the applicant is and will be able to compensate the respondent for any loss which the order may cause him in the event that it is later adjudged that the injunction should not have been granted³. Unless the court otherwise orders, the applicant will be required to give an undertaking to the court that he will compensate the respondent for any such loss⁴.

An interim injunction is an order made for the duration of the litigation, or part of it, at the request of a litigant (whether claimant or defendant) in order to protect that party's rights until the court can finally adjudicate the dispute. It is not intended to provide a final resolution of the issues. However, where there is no arguable defence⁵, or no dispute as to the facts⁶, or the grant of the injunction will dispose of the claim⁷, the decision on an interim injunction application is not merely provisional and the question of the balance of convenience or justice does not arise.

High Court judges and any other judge duly authorised may grant search orders⁸ and freezing injunctions⁹. In a case in the High Court, masters and district judges have the power to grant injunctions by consent, injunctions in connection with charging orders and appointments of receivers, and injunctions in aid of execution of judgments¹⁰. In any other case any judge who has jurisdiction to conduct the trial of the claim has the power to grant an injunction in that claim¹¹. A master or district judge has the power to vary or discharge an injunction granted by any judge with the consent of all the parties¹².

An order for an injunction made in the presence of all parties to be bound by it, or made at a hearing of which they have had notice, may state that it is effective until trial or further order¹³.

Any order for an injunction must set out clearly what the respondent must do or not do¹⁴.

1 As to the power to grant interim injunctions see CPR 25.1(1)(a); and PARA 315 head (1). The power to grant an injunction, whether interim or final, is derived, in the High Court, from the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1) and, probably, from its inherent jurisdiction, and, in a county court, from the County Courts Act 1984 s 38; and from the County Court Remedies Regulations 1991, SI 1991/1222. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. See further PARA 383 et seq. As to the jurisdiction to grant interim injunctions see the text and notes 8-12.

2 The 'balance of convenience' might more properly be termed the 'balance of justice'; Francome v Mirror Group Newspapers Ltd [1984] 2 All ER 408 at 413, [1984] 1 WLR 892 at 898, CA, per Sir John Donaldson MR.

3 The factors listed are those prescribed in American Cyanamid Co v Ethicon Ltd [1975] AC 396, [1975] 1 All ER 504, HL. Note that a party's inability to compensate for irreparable harm is merely a factor in the balance of convenience (see American Cyanamid Co v Ethicon Ltd [1975] AC 396, [1975] 1 All ER 504, HL), and an impecunious applicant may be able to obtain an interim injunction (see Allen v Jambo Holdings Ltd [1980] 2 All ER 502, [1980] 1 WLR 1252). As to the offer of an undertaking not to rely on, or allege infringement of, any claim wider than the original application, and the lapsing of such an undertaking, see Zipher Ltd v Markem Systems Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 44, [2009] All ER (D) 83 (Feb).

4 See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 5.1. Any order for an injunction, unless the court orders otherwise, must contain (1) an undertaking by the applicant to the court to pay any damages which the respondent(s) (or any other party served with or notified of the order) sustain which the court considers the applicant should pay; (2) if made without notice to any other party, an undertaking by the applicant to the court to serve on the respondent the application notice, evidence in support and any order made as soon as practicable; (3) if made without notice to any other party, a return date for a further hearing at which the other party can be present; (4) if made before filing the application notice, an undertaking to file and pay the appropriate fee on the same or next working day; and (5) if made before issue of a claim form, either an undertaking to issue and pay the appropriate fee on the same or next working day, or directions for the commencement of the claim: para 5.1. When the court makes an order for an injunction, it should consider whether to require an undertaking by the applicant to pay any damages sustained by a person other than the respondent, including another party to the proceedings or any other person who may suffer loss as a consequence of the order: para 5.1A. As to service of the application notice and evidence in support see PARA 321. As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2. 317. Order for inspection, preservation etc of property of non-party.

On the application, in accordance with rules of court, of a party to any proceedings, the High Court and a county court have power, in such circumstances as may be prescribed¹, to make an order providing for any one or more of the following matters, that is to say:

512 (1) the inspection, photographing, preservation, custody and detention of property² which is not the property of, or in the possession of, any party to the proceedings but which is subject-matter of the proceedings or as to which any question arises in the proceedings; and

513 (2) the taking of samples of any such property as is mentioned in head (1) above and the carrying out of any experiment on or with any such property³.

The court may not make such an order if it considers that compliance with the order, if made, would be likely to be injurious to the public interest⁴.

318. Freezing injunctions.

The court has wide powers to grant interim injunctions¹, which include the power to grant an injunction (a 'freezing injunction') preventing a defendant from disposing of assets in order to defeat a judgment². Freezing injunctions are discussed elsewhere in this title³.

319. Search orders.

The court¹ may make an order for the purpose of securing, in the case of any existing or proposed proceedings in the court, the preservation of evidence which is or may be relevant, or the preservation of property which is or may be the subject-matter of the proceedings or as to which any question arises or may arise in the proceedings². A person who is, or appears to the court likely to be, a party to proceedings in the court may make an application for such an order³.

Such an order may direct any person to permit any person described in the order, or secure that any person so described, is permitted to enter premises⁴ in England and Wales, and while on the premises, to take in accordance with the terms of the order any of the following steps⁵:

- 514 (1) to carry out a search for or inspection of anything described in the order; and
- 515 (2) to make or obtain a copy, photograph, sample or other record of anything so described⁶.

The order may also direct the person concerned to provide any person described in the order, or secure that any person so described is provided, with any information or article described⁷ in the order, and to allow any person described in the order, or secure that any person so described is allowed, to retain for safe keeping anything described in the order⁸.

An order so made is to have effect subject to such conditions as are specified in the order⁹.

These provisions do not affect any right of a person to refuse to do anything on the ground that to do so might tend to expose him or his spouse or civil partner to proceedings for an offence or for the recovery of a penalty¹⁰.

The order must be served personally by the supervising solicitor¹¹ unless the court otherwise orders, and must be accompanied by the evidence in support and any documents capable of being copied¹². It may only be served between 9.30 am and 5.30 pm Monday to Friday unless the court otherwise orders¹³ and must not be carried out at the same time as a police search warrant¹⁴.

The supervising solicitor may be accompanied only by the persons mentioned in the order¹⁵ and he must explain the terms and effect of the order to the respondent in everyday language and advise him of his right to legal advice and of his right to apply to vary or discharge the order and that he may be entitled to avail himself of legal professional privilege and the privilege against self-incrimination¹⁶.

No material must be removed unless clearly covered by the terms of the order¹⁷ and the premises must not be searched and no items may be removed from them except in the presence of the respondent or a person who appears to be a responsible employee of the respondent¹⁸.

Where material in dispute is removed pending trial, the applicant's solicitors should place it in the custody of the respondent's solicitors on their undertaking to retain it in safekeeping and to produce it to the court when required¹⁹.

The supervising solicitor must make a list of all material removed from the premises and supply a copy of the list to the respondent²⁰ and no material may be removed from the premises until the respondent has had reasonable time to check the list²¹.

The supervising solicitor must provide a report on the carrying out of the order to the applicant's solicitors²². As soon as the report is received the applicant's solicitors must serve a copy of it on the respondent and file a copy of it with the court²³.

1 For these purposes, 'court' means the High Court: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(8).

2 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(1). See also PARAS 315 head (8), 402 et seq. See further Elvee Ltd v Taylor [2001] EWCA Civ 1943, [2002] FSR 738 (application to set aside a search and seizure order, which had been executed, refused because respondent would have been able to seek an order for specific disclosure of any potentially relevant material which it had thereby discovered).

3 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(2).

4 For these purposes, 'premises' includes any vehicle: Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(8).

5 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(3).

6 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(4).

7 An order under the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7 may describe anything generally, whether by reference to a class or otherwise: s 7(8).

10 Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 7(7) (amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 s 261(1), Sch 27 para 154). However, there is no privilege against self incrimination in intellectual property cases: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 72 (amended by virtue of the Patents, Designs and Marks Act 1986 s 2(3), Sch 2 para 1(2)(h); and by the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 s 303(1), Sch 7 para 28(1), (2); and the Civil Partnership Act 2004 Sch 27 para 69), proceedings for the recovery or administration of any property, for the execution of any trust or for an account of any property or dealings with property in relation to offences under the Theft Act 1968 (see s 31 (amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 Sch 27 para 28)); or proceedings in which a court is hearing an application for an order under the Children Act 1989 Pt IV (ss 31-42) or Pt V (ss 43-52) (see s 98 (amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 Sch 27 para 132)); however, the privilege may still be claimed in relation to material or information required to be disclosed by an order, as regards potential criminal proceedings outside those statutory provisions: see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.9. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1. See also the Fraud Act 2006 s 13(1), under which a person is not to be excused from answering any question put to him in proceedings relating to property or complying with any order made in proceedings relating to property, on the ground that doing so may incriminate him or his spouse or civil partner of an offence under that Act or a related offence; and see Kensington International Ltd v Republic of Congo [2007] EWCA Civ 1128, [2008] 1 All ER (Comm) 934, [2008] 1 WLR 1144. As to privilege against self incrimination in the context of disclosure and production for inspection of documents see PARA 580.

11 The supervising solicitor must be experienced in the operation of search orders. A supervising solicitor may be contacted either through the Law Society or, for the London area, through the London Solicitors Litigation Association: Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.2. The supervising solicitor must not be an employee or member of the applicant's firm of solicitors: para 7.6.

If any of the listed items exists only in computer readable form, the respondent must immediately give the applicant's solicitors effective access to the computers, with all necessary passwords, to enable them to be searched, and cause the listed items to be printed out: para 7.5(8). Where, however, the supervising solicitor is satisfied that full compliance with para 7.5(7), (8) is impracticable, he may permit the search to proceed and items to be removed without compliance with the impracticable requirements: para 7.5(13). The applicant must take all reasonable steps to ensure that no damage is done to any computer or data; and the applicant and his representatives may not themselves search the respondent's computers unless they have sufficient expertise to do so without damaging the respondent's system: para 7.5(9), (10).

320. Time when an order for an interim remedy may be made.

An order for an interim remedy may be made at any time, including before proceedings are started¹ and after judgment has been given². This is, however, subject to any rule, practice direction or other enactment which provides otherwise³. Moreover, the court may grant an interim remedy before a claim has been made⁴ only if the matter is urgent or it is otherwise desirable to do so in the interests of justice⁵. Unless the court otherwise orders, a defendant⁶ may not apply for any of the specified orders for interim remedies⁷ before he has filed⁸ either an acknowledgment of service⁹ or a defence¹⁰.

Where it grants an interim remedy before a claim has been commenced, the court should give directions requiring a claim to be commenced¹¹ but need not do so, in particular, where the application is made for an order for disclosure of documents or inspection of property before commencement of a claim¹².

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/11. INTERIM REMEDIES/321. How to apply for an interim remedy.

321. How to apply for an interim remedy.

The court¹ may grant an interim remedy on an application made without notice if it appears to the court that there are good reasons for not giving notice². Such applications for interim injunctions may be made whether or not the claim form has been issued³ and in cases of extreme urgency may be dealt with by telephone⁴.

An application for an interim remedy must be supported by evidence, unless the court orders otherwise⁵. If the applicant makes an application without giving notice, the evidence in support of the application must state the reasons why notice has not been given⁶.

2 CPR 25.3(1). The application notice for an interim injunction must state the order sought and the date, time and place of the hearing: Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 2.1. The application notice and evidence in support must be served as soon as practicable after issue and in any event not less than three days before the court is due to hear the application: para 2.2; and see CPR 23.7(1), (2), (4); and PARA 307. Where the court is to serve, sufficient copies of the application notice and evidence in support for the court and for each respondent should be filed for issue and service: Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 2.3. Whenever possible a draft of the order sought is to be filed with the application notice and a disk containing the draft should also be available to the court. This will enable the court officer to arrange for any amendments to be incorporated and for the speedy preparation and sealing of the order: para 2.4. For general rules about making applications see CPR Pt 23; and PARA 303 et seq. 322. Application for an interim remedy where there is no related claim.

Where a person makes an application for the inspection, photographing, preservation, custody or detention of property either before the commencement of proceedings¹ or against a non-party², the evidence in support must show, if practicable by reference to any statement of case³ prepared in relation to the proceedings or anticipated proceedings, that the property is or may become the subject matter of such proceedings⁴ or is relevant to the issues that will arise in relation to such proceedings⁵.

A copy of the application notice and a copy of the evidence in support must be served⁶ on the person against whom the order is sought⁷ and, in relation to applications against a non-party⁸, on every party to the proceedings other than the applicant⁹.

323 Procedure for inspection of property before commencement or against a non-party

NOTES 1, 2--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/11. INTERIM REMEDIES/324. Interim payments; in general.

324. Interim payments; in general.

Provision has been made by the Civil Procedure Rules under the relevant powers set out in the Supreme Court Act 1981¹ and the County Courts Act 1984² for enabling the High Court or a county court to make an order requiring a party to the proceedings to make an interim payment³ of such amount as may be specified in the order⁴.

The claimant⁵ may not apply for an order for an interim payment before the end of the period for filing an acknowledgment of service⁶ applicable to the defendant⁷ against whom the application is made⁸. He may, however, make more than one application for such an order⁹.

A copy of an application notice for an order for an interim payment must be served at least 14 days before the hearing of the application¹⁰ and must be supported by evidence¹¹. If the respondent to an application for such an order wishes to rely on written evidence at the hearing, he must file the written evidence and serve copies on every other party to the application, at least seven days before the hearing of the application¹². If the applicant wishes to rely on written evidence in reply, he must file the written evidence and serve a copy on the respondent, at least three days before the hearing of the application¹³.

The court¹⁴ may order an interim payment in one sum or in instalments¹⁵.

1 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

2 See the County Courts Act 1984 s 50 (amended by the Civil Procedure Act 1997 s 10, Sch 2 para 2(1)-(3)).

3 For these purposes, 'interim payment', in relation to a party to any proceedings, means a payment on account of any damages, debt or other sum (excluding any costs) which that party may be held liable to pay to or for the benefit of another party to the proceedings if a final judgment or order of the court in the proceedings is given or made in favour of that other party: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32(5); the County Courts Act 1984 s 50(5). See also CPR 25.1(1)(k); and PARA 315 head (11) in the text.

4 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32(1); the County Courts Act 1984 s 50 (as amended: see note 2); CPR 25.6-25.9; the text and notes 5-15; and PARAS 325-328. Rules of court so made may include provision for enabling a party to any proceedings who, in pursuance of such an order, has made an interim payment, to recover the whole or part of the amount of the payment in such circumstances, and from such other party to the proceedings, as may be determined in accordance with the rules: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32(2); County Courts Act 1984 s 50(2) (as amended: see note 2). Any rules so made may include such incidental, supplementary and consequential provisions as the Civil Procedure Rule Committee may consider necessary or expedient: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32(3); County Courts Act 1984 s 50(3) (as amended: see note 2). Nothing in the relevant provisions, however, is to be construed as affecting the exercise of any power relating to costs, including any power to make rules of court relating thereto: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 32(4); County Courts Act 1984 s 50(4) (as amended: see note 2). An application for an interim payment of damages must be supported by evidence dealing with the following: (1) the sum of money sought by way of an interim payment; (2) the items or matters in respect of which the interim payment is sought; (3) the sum of money for which final judgment is likely to be given; (4) the reasons for believing that the conditions set out in CPR 25.7 (see PARA 325) are satisfied; (5) any other relevant matters; (6) in claims for personal injuries, details of special damages and past and future loss; and (7) in a claim under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 (see DAMAGES vol 12(1) (Reissue) PARA 932 et seq), details of the person(s) on whose behalf the claim is made and the nature of the claim: Practice Direction--Interim Payments PD 25B para 2.1. Any documents in support of the application must be exhibited, including, in personal injuries claims, the medical report(s): para 2.2. 12 CPR 25.6(4); Practice Direction--Interim Payments PD 25B para 2.3. CPR 25.6 does not, however, require written evidence to be filed if it has already been filed or to be served on a party on whom it has already been served: CPR 25.6(6). See also CPR 23.7(5)(a); and PARA 307. Form N244 Pts B, C and Form PF244 Pts B, C in The Civil Court Practice (forms for application notices: see PARA 306 note 6) provide for the applicant to give details of the documents containing the evidence upon which he intends to rely.

14 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

15 CPR 25.6(7). Where an interim payment is to be paid in instalments the order must set out (1) the total amount of the payment; (2) the amount of each instalment; (3) the number of instalments and the date on which each is to be paid; and (4) to whom the payment should be made: Practice Direction--Interim Payments PD 25B para 3.

325. Interim payments; conditions to be satisfied and matters to be taken into account.

The court¹ may only make an order for an interim payment² where any of the following conditions are satisfied:

- 516 (1) the defendant³ against whom the order is sought has admitted liability to pay damages⁴ or some other sum of money to the claimant⁵;
- 517 (2) the claimant has obtained judgment against that defendant for damages to be assessed or for a sum of money (other than costs) to be assessed⁶;
- 518 (3) it is satisfied that, if the claim went to trial, the claimant would obtain judgment for a substantial amount of money (other than costs) against the defendant from whom he is seeking an order for an interim payment whether or not that defendant is the only defendant or one of a number of defendants to the claim⁷;
- 519 (4) the following conditions are satisfied⁸:
 - 7. (a) the claimant is seeking an order for possession of land (whether or not any other order is also sought)⁹; and
 - 8. (b) the court is satisfied that, if the case went to trial, the defendant would be held liable (even if the claim for possession fails) to pay the claimant a sum of money for the defendant's occupation and use of the land while the claim for possession was pending¹⁰;
- 65 520 (5) in a claim in which there are two or more defendants and the order is sought against any one or more of those defendants, the following conditions are satisfied¹¹:
 - 9. (a) the court is satisfied that, if the claim went to trial, the claimant would obtain judgment for a substantial amount of money (other than costs) against at least one of the defendants (but the court cannot determine which)¹²; and
 - 10. (b) all the defendants are either a defendant that is insured in respect of the claim, a defendant whose liability will be met by an insurer under the statutory provisions relating to third party risks¹³ or an insurer acting under the Motor Insurers Bureau Agreement, or the Motor Insurers Bureau where it is acting itself, or a defendant that is a public body¹⁴.

The court must not order an interim payment of more than a reasonable proportion of the likely amount of the final judgment¹⁵. In considering the amount of an interim payment the court must take into account contributory negligence¹⁶ and any relevant set-off or counterclaim¹⁷.

The court's permission must be obtained before making a voluntary interim payment in respect of a claim by a child¹⁸ or protected party¹⁹.

327. Powers of court where it has made an order for interim payment.

Where a defendant¹ has been ordered to make an interim payment², or has in fact made an interim payment (whether voluntarily³ or under an order), the court⁴ may make an order to adjust the interim payment⁵. The court may in particular order all or part of the interim payment to be repaid⁶, vary or discharge the order for the interim payment⁷ or order a defendant to reimburse, either wholly or partly, another defendant who has made an interim payment⁸. The court may make an order ordering such reimbursement, however, only if the defendant to be reimbursed made the interim payment in relation to a claim in respect of which he has made a claim against the other defendant for a contribution⁹, indemnity¹⁰ or other remedy¹¹ and, where the claim or part to which the interim payment relates has not been discontinued or disposed of, the circumstances are such that the court could make an order¹² for interim payment¹³.

The court may make an order under these provisions without an application by any party if it makes the order when it disposes of the claim or any part of it¹⁴. Where a defendant has made an interim payment and the amount of the payment is more than his total liability under the final judgment or order, the court may award him interest on the overpaid amount from the date when he made the interim payment¹⁵.

A. TYPES OF INJUNCTION

331. Meaning of 'injunction'.

An injunction is a judicial remedy by which a person is ordered to refrain from doing or ordered to do a particular act or thing. In the former case it is called a prohibitory or restrictive injunction¹, and in the latter a mandatory injunction². Either type of injunction may be interim³ or perpetual. An injunction is a remedy of an equitable nature⁴, and therefore acts in personam⁵. Accordingly, an injunction affecting land does not run with the land⁶.

2 See PARA 376 et seq. As to the meaning of 'injunction' in the Civil Procedure Rules see PARA 315 note 2.

332. Mandatory injunctions.

Formerly the Court of Chancery would not direct the performance of a positive act, but by restraining a defendant from allowing things to remain as they were, as, for example, from allowing buildings to remain on land, indirectly accomplished the same result. An order so framed was called a mandatory order; but now all mandatory injunctions should be in the direct mandatory form, as, for example, by directing buildings to be pulled down and removed¹.

¹ See PARA 417. A mandatory order (formerly an order of mandamus) is similar in many respects to a mandatory injunction as a means of obtaining relief: see JUDICIAL REVIEW vol 61 (2010) PARA 703.

333. Perpetual injunctions.

A perpetual injunction is granted after a final determination of the rights of the parties. It obviates the necessity of bringing action after action in respect of every infringement of the rights so determined¹.

334. Interim injunctions.

The object of an interim injunction is to preserve matters pending the trial of matters in dispute¹, and an interim injunction may be granted without notice in an emergency². With limited exceptions the person applying for an interim injunction must always give an undertaking to pay damages in case it should turn out at the hearing that he is in the wrong³. Such an injunction is usually so framed as to continue in force only until the hearing of the cause or until further order⁴. It cannot be considered in argument as affecting the ultimate decision of a cause⁵. It does not assume finally to dispose of the question of the legal right⁶, and will only impose such restraint as may suffice to stop the mischief complained of, or, where the object is to stay further injury, to keep things as they are at the moment⁷. Such an injunction is in effect a substitute for the damages which might be assessed for the period between the issuing of the writ and the trial⁸.

2 Beese v Woodhouse [1970] 1 All ER 769, [1970] 1 WLR 586, CA. There is jurisdiction to grant an injunction without notice where the judge concludes on a prima facie view that otherwise irreparable damage may be done to the claimant before an application for an interim injunction can be heard, after notice given to the other party: see Beese v Woodhouse [1970] 1 All ER 769, [1970] 1 WLR 586, CA; and PARA 321. Where an application is made without notice to the respondent, the evidence must also set out why notice was not given: see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 3.4. As to interim injunctions see further PARA 316. A person who seeks an injunction without notice is under a duty to make full and frank disclosure of all the material facts; if he fails in that duty he is at risk of being denied interim relief although the court retains a discretion to grant relief even if there has been non-disclosure or worse: W v H (Family Division: without notice orders) [2001] 1 All ER 300.

It was held that since the issue of the writ operated to determine the lease an interim injunction could not be granted on the footing that the lease was subsisting. Where, however, the claim for an injunction is an alternative claim and not ancillary to a claim for possession, then the lease is not determined by the claim for possession: Calabar Properties Ltd v Seagull Autos Ltd [1969] 1 Ch 451, [1968] 1 All ER 1, following Moore v Ullcoats Mining Co Ltd [1908] 1 Ch 575. B. ANCILLARY AND ALTERNATIVE RELIEF

335. Accounts.

Where a person establishes his right to a perpetual injunction, the court will also, where the case so requires, grant him an account, so that his remedy may be complete¹; but before the Judicature Acts, if for any reason the injunction was refused, there could be no account, for there was nothing to which the jurisdiction of equity could attach, the right to an account being dependent on the right to the injunction², except in the case of mines³. The right to an account may be lost by delay⁴, even though an injunction is granted⁵. The account is limited to the actual profits made by the wrong-doer, and cannot be extended so as to cover the damage sustained by reason of merely tortious acts unaccompanied by profit⁶. At common law, the account was limited to a period of six years before the date of the commencement of the proceedings⁷, except in cases of fraud⁸, but the period is now the time limit applicable to the claim which is the basis of the duty to account⁹.

Where a doubt exists as to the right, and especially when an injunction might be a great hardship on the defendant, an interim injunction will be refused on the defendant undertaking to keep an account¹, in which case the claimant is entitled to a formal undertaking².

An account may also be ordered to be kept in any case where an interim injunction is refused³, or when an injunction is stayed pending an appeal⁴.

The court has power to award damages either in addition to or in substitution for an injunction¹. However, in no case will an inquiry as to damages in addition to an account be ordered; the party who has obtained a decree must elect which of the two forms of relief he will adopt².

Although the court cannot compel the Treasury to pay to sequestrators a pension granted to the defendant, the defendant can be prevented from receiving it and the sequestrators can be authorised to receive it¹. Where defendants were in breach of an undertaking given in lieu of the injunction sought, and the claimants then moved to sequester the defendants' property, the court, while holding that the facts strictly enabled it to make a sequestration order, granted an injunction in the terms of the undertaking and penalised the defendants in costs².

An injunction may be granted in aid of or in lieu of equitable execution³. An injunction can also be granted in support of a charging order on land, securities or money in court⁴.

A freezing injunction may be granted or continued after judgment in aid of execution⁵.

The dealing with stocks, shares and dividends may be temporarily prevented by means of a stop notice¹, or, when the subject matter is in court, by means of a charging order² or stop order³.

The appointment of a receiver⁴ operates, in effect, as an injunction⁵, because the court will not allow its officer to be interfered with⁶ and can grant an injunction to restrain such interference⁷. Sometimes an injunction as well as the appointment of a receiver will be granted for the purpose of marking the court's sense of the conduct of the parties who have misconducted themselves⁸.

In relation to the confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking⁹ or to the forfeiture of terrorist funds¹⁰, the High Court may by a restraint order prohibit any person from dealing with such proceeds or such funds subject to such conditions and exceptions as may be specified in the order¹¹.

(ii) Jurisdiction

A. COURTS HAVING JURISDICTION

340. Concurrent jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction to grant relief by way of injunction was formerly only exercisable by the Court of Chancery and by the Court of Exchequer in equity¹, but courts of common law were empowered by statute to grant injunctions in certain cases², and the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery and the common law courts having been transferred³ to the High Court of Justice, every branch of the High Court has now, therefore, jurisdiction to grant injunctions in all cases in which courts of equity or common law could formerly grant that relief⁴.

1 The equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was abolished by the Court of Chancery Act 1841 s 1 (repealed). For the cases in which the Court of Chancery exercised jurisdiction in respect of injunctions before 1875 see EQUITY vol 16(2) (Reissue) PARA 408 et seq.

2 The power was conferred by the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 ss 79-82 (repealed, subject to savings by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act 1883 ss 3, 5-7, Schedule (repealed)). The courts of common law could grant injunctions in the case of patents under the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852 (repealed). See now the Patents Act 1977; and CPR Pt 63 (which assigns proceedings under that Act to the Chancery Division), and PATENTS AND REGISTERED DESIGNS vol 79 (2008) PARAS 538, 543-544.

3 Replaced by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 s 16 (repealed), replaced by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 18 (2) (repealed): see now the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19(2). As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

4 Beddow v Beddow (1878) 9 ChD 89. As to the statutory jurisdiction to grant injunctions see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1); and PARA 347.

There is now included, as a branch of the High Court, the Family Division: see s 5; and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 603. The High Court of Admiralty (now part of the Queen's Bench Division: see COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARAS 601, 603) always had jurisdiction in respect of injurious acts done on the high seas, and the High Court therefore has jurisdiction to restrain such acts: see The Tubantia [1924] P 78, where interference with the salvors' possession of a wreck on the high seas was restrained. This jurisdiction of the High Court is practically unlimited, except for the fact that it can only be exercised where it is right or just to do so; but what is right or just must be decided not by the caprice of the judge, but according to sufficient legal reasons or on settled legal principles: Beddow v Beddow (1878) 9 ChD 89. See also PARA 349.

341. Effect of membership of the European Union.

An injunction may be granted for the purpose of enforcing European Community law¹. In a case where the claimants applied for an interlocutory (interim) injunction to restrain the passing off of beer, the defendants set up a defence based on European Community law which, had it been prima facie a good defence, would probably have prevented the court from granting an interim injunction². The court has power in advance of any decision by the European Court of Justice to suspend on a temporary basis the operation of an Act of Parliament which is alleged to infringe Community law and to issue an interim injunction to that effect against the Secretary of State³ so as to protect the rights claimed by a party under provisions of Community law which are directly enforceable⁴.

1 For example, the EC Treaty (Treaty establishing the European Community (Rome, 25 March 1957; TS 1 (1973); Cmnd 5179)) art 82 (formerly art 86) states that the abuse of a dominant market position is prohibited. Since prohibited conduct in England is sanctioned by injunction it follows that an action lies at the instance of a private person for an injunction to restrain the conduct. See Garden Cottage Foods Ltd v Milk Marketing Board [1984] AC 130, [1983] 2 All ER 770, HL. For a more recent example see the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s 410(3), which makes a direction by the Treasury to implement European Community obligations or other international obligations of the United Kingdom enforceable by injunction; and FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS vol 49 (2008) PARA 780.

342. The court acts in personam.

In granting an injunction, the court acts in personam¹, meaning that its jurisdiction is grounded on the fact that the party on whom the order is made is within the power of the court². It will not suffer anyone within its reach to do what is contrary to its notions of equity merely because the act to be done may be, in point of locality, outside the jurisdiction³. However, the court will not normally adjudicate on questions relating to the title to or the right to possession of immovable property out of the jurisdiction⁴; nor will it entertain actions against foreign sovereigns⁵ or make a decree to give effect to contractual rights relating to immovables which the law of the place where the goods are situated treats as incapable of creation⁶.

The court has inherent jurisdiction to restrain the making public of allegations advanced in court proceedings where repetition of such allegations might adversely affect the welfare of a child subject to the proceedings: A v M (Family Proceedings: Publicity) [2000] 1 FCR 1. See EQUITY.

2 Lord Portarlington v Soulby (1834) 3 My & K 104. Because the party on whom the order is made must be amenable to the court's jurisdiction, an injunction ought not to be granted against a person incapable within the M'Naughten Rules of understanding what he was doing or that what he was doing was wrong, because he would not be capable of complying with it so that the injunction could not have the desired deterrent effect or operate on his mind so as to regulate his conduct: Wookey v Wookey [1991] Fam 121, [1991] 3 All ER 365, CA. As to the M'Naughten Rules see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11 (1) (2006 Reissue) PARAS 31-33. An injunction against a company can be enforced by sequestration of any assets it may have within the jurisdiction, and it is not a good ground for refusing to grant an injunction that the defendant is a company incorporated abroad: Board of Governors of Hospital for Sick Children v Walt Disney Productions Inc [1968] Ch 52, [1967] 1 All ER 1005, CA (onus on defendant of proving absence of assets within the jurisdiction). 343. Other aspects of the High Court's jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to grant an injunction may be used to protect a wide variety of rights¹, but an individual cannot obtain an injunction to restrain an unlawful or illegal act if the act does not threaten to infringe any of his rights: the High Court has no jurisdiction to prevent the commission of acts merely because they are criminal or illegal². However, if the act is of a public nature, the Attorney General may apply to the court for an injunction, and the court may interfere if it is established that the act is an illegal act and it affects the public generally, even though no evidence of actual injury is given³. The court has power to grant an injunction against interference with trade where an illegal act has been committed; thus if a person, without just cause or excuse, deliberately interferes with the trade or business of another by unlawful means, then he is acting unlawfully, and in a proper case an injunction can be granted against him⁴.

1 For example, the High Court's power extends to intervention in disputes between members of a family. As regards disputes between husband and wife, the court will interfere to protect the property and other rights of a spouse and may, for instance, in certain circumstances grant an injunction restraining one spouse from molesting the other: see MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 72 (2009) PARA 444; MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 73 (2009) PARAS 716, 974; and PARA 345 text to notes 9-10. In the case of the children of a marriage the court will, in a proper case, grant an injunction for the purpose of partially or completely restraining a parent from exercising any control over or having any association with his or her children: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 218; and MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 73 (2009) PARAS 974, 988. An injunction may also be granted restraining the marriage of a ward of court who is a minor, and all communication and association with the ward: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 218. In very grave circumstances a parent can obtain an injunction excluding an adult child from the parent's home: Egan v Egan [1975] Ch 218, [1975] 2 All ER 167. However, a husband cannot obtain an injunction to prevent his wife from having a lawful abortion: Paton v British Pregnancy Advisory Services Trustees [1979] QB 276, [1978] 2 All ER 987, CA; cf C v S [1988] QB 135, [1987] 1 All ER 1230, CA (putative father).

344. Absence of jurisdiction to restrain proceedings.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to grant an injunction does not extend to restraining causes or proceedings pending in the High Court or before the Court of Appeal¹. Thus, a person who is prejudiced by the conduct of a receiver appointed in an action ought not to begin, without the leave of the court, an action to restrain the proceedings of the receiver, even though the act complained of is beyond the receiver's authority. His proper course is to apply for such relief as he may be entitled to in the action in which the receiver was appointed².

A statute may prohibit the granting of an injunction in particular cases as, for instance, to compel an employee to attend at any place for the doing of any work³.

345. Injunctions granted by county courts.

In the exercise of its powers to grant ancillary relief¹, a county court may grant injunctions, both final² and interim³, provided that there are between the parties proceedings within the court's jurisdiction to which the claim to an injunction is ancillary⁴. It may not, however, grant a search order⁵ or a freezing injunction⁶ except in defined circumstances⁷.

A party does not need leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal where the determination sought to be appealed from includes or preserves an injunction⁸.

A county court has jurisdiction to grant a non-molestation order under the Family Law Act 1996, containing either or both (1) provision prohibiting a person (the 'respondent') from molesting another person who is associated with the respondent; (2) provision prohibiting the respondent from molesting a relevant child⁹. A county court also has jurisdiction to grant an occupation order in relation to a dwelling house¹⁰.

Except in relation to search orders and freezing injunctions, a county court has the same power to grant interim injunctions as the High Court: Burris v Azadani [1995] 4 All ER 802, [1995] 1 WLR 1372, CA.

⁴ County Courts Act 1984 s 38(1), (2) (as substituted: see note 1). A county court may grant a freezing injunction (1) when exercising jurisdiction in family proceedings; (2) for the purpose of making an order for the preservation, custody or detention of property which forms or may form the subject matter of the proceedings; (3) in aid of execution of a judgment or order made in proceedings in a county court to preserve assets until execution can be levied upon them; or (4) where the proceedings are to be or are included in the Central London County Court Mercantile List and the application is made to a circuit judge nominated by the Senior Presiding Judge (reg 3(3) (amended by SI 1995/206 and SI 2002/439)). B. INHERENT JURISDICTION AND THE EFFECT OF STATUTE

346. Original jurisdiction.

The power to grant an injunction does not depend upon the existence of property¹. Independently of any question as to the right at law, the Court of Chancery had an original and independent jurisdiction to prevent what it considered an injury, whether arising from a violation of an unquestionable right or from a breach of contract or confidence².

The granting of an injunction in any particular case is dependent upon the court's discretion³.

1 As to interference with unincorporated bodies see PARA 434.

2 Prince Albert v Strange (1849) 1 Mac & G 25; Pollard v Photographic Co (1888) 40 ChD 345 at 354. The origin and extent of the jurisdiction was considered in Goodeson v Gallatin (1771) 2 Dick 455: see also PARA 475.

3 Cf the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1); and PARA 347. See eg Doherty v Allman (1878) 3 App Cas 709, HL. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

In exercising its discretion the court has regard to a wide range of possible consequences: see eg Brent v Brent [1975] Fam 1, [1974] 2 All ER 1211, where the court took into consideration that to grant an injunction might influence a local authority's housing priorities, which was one of the reasons why an injunction was refused. Although the court may declare that trade restrictions are contrary to the public interest, it will exercise its discretion and will not grant an injunction as of course: Re Chemists' Federation's Agreement [1958] 3 All ER 448, [1958] 1 WLR 1192. The court will take into account the public interest: see eg Femis-Bank (Anguilla) Ltd v Lazar [1991] Ch 391, [1991] 2 All ER 865. It appears that the court has power to grant injunctive relief to exclude a stranger from property in which he has a proprietary interest where his behaviour interferes with the rights of a person with parental responsibility for a child to exercise that responsibility appropriately, albeit that the power will be exercised cautiously and probably only as a last resort: see C v K (Ouster Order: Non-Parent) [1996] 3 FCR 488. A court has power to grant an injunction restraining a vexatious litigant whose conduct poses a serious threat to the proper administration of justice: A-G v Ebert [2001] EWHC Admin 695, [2002] 2 All ER 789, DC.

347. Statutory jurisdiction.

An injunction (whether interim¹ or final) may be granted in all cases in which it appears to the court² to be just and convenient³ to do so⁴; and any such order may be made unconditionally or upon such terms and conditions as the court thinks just⁵. The power to grant an interim injunction restraining a party to any proceedings from removing from the jurisdiction or otherwise dealing with assets located within that jurisdiction is available in cases where that party is, as well as in cases where he is not, domiciled, resident or present within the jurisdiction⁶.

1 These words are not confined in their meaning to an order made between writ and final judgment, but mean an order other than final judgment in an action, whether made before judgment or after: Smith v Cowell (1880) 6 QBD 75, CA; Nanda v Nanda [1968] P 351, [1967] 3 All ER 401. See B v B (Injunction: Restraint on Leaving Jurisdiction) [1997] 3 All ER 258 (although the court has jurisdiction under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1) to restrain a party from leaving the jurisdiction, the statutory provision does not entitle a court to restrain a debtor from leaving the jurisdiction indefinitely until a debt is paid). Concurrent proceedings before the court and before an arbitrator would not lead to the grant of an injunction: J Jarvis and Sons Ltd v Blue Circle Dartford Estates Ltd [2007] EWHC 1262 (TCC), [2007] BLR 439.

348. Effect of statutory provision.

The statutory provision¹ did not alter the principles upon which the court acted in granting injunctions², but was intended only to do away with certain technical difficulties with respect to injunctions³. It did not enlarge the jurisdiction of the court so as to enable it to grant an injunction in a case in which, before the provision came into force, there was no right on the one side or no liability on the other at law or in equity⁴. However, it gave to the court power, when dealing with rights which were under its jurisdiction independently of this provision, to add to what would previously have been the remedy, a remedy by way of injunction, if it should think it just and convenient⁵. Therefore, whenever a right which can be asserted either at law or in equity does exist⁶, whatever the previous practice may have been, the court is now enabled by virtue of this provision, in a proper case, to grant an injunction to protect that right⁷.

349. Meaning of 'just and convenient'.

The words 'just and convenient'¹ in the statutory provision² do not mean that the court can grant an injunction simply because it thinks it convenient, but mean that it should grant an injunction for the protection of rights or the prevention of injury according to legal principles³. They confer neither arbitrary nor unregulated discretion on the court, and do not authorise it to invent new modes of enforcing judgments in substitution for the ordinary modes⁴.

350. Particular statutory powers to grant injunction.

In certain circumstances the court has specific statutory power to grant an injunction. It may, for example, grant an injunction restraining a person who has acted in an office in which he is not entitled to act from so acting¹. An injunction may be granted on the application of the Financial Services Authority or the Secretary of State for contravention or likely contravention of requirements under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000², or on the application of the Financial Services Authority or the Secretary of State to restrain market abuse³. An injunction may be granted in respect of certain overseas insurance companies, restraining them from disposing of or otherwise dealing with any of their assets, on application by the Financial Services Authority⁴. Other statutory powers to grant injunctions are conferred, for example in respect of patents⁵. In county court proceedings in respect of discrimination (other than in the field of employment) on the ground of sex or race, the court may grant all remedies which the High Court could grant if it had jurisdiction⁶, and thus may grant an injunction. Other powers of granting injunctions are conferred on the county court by the County Courts Act 1984⁷.

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(ii) Jurisdiction/B. INHERENT JURISDICTION AND THE EFFECT OF STATUTE/351. Where statute provides a particular remedy.

351. Where statute provides a particular remedy.

Where a statute provides a particular remedy for the infringement of a right created by it¹ or existing at common law², the court's jurisdiction to protect the right by injunction is not excluded unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication so provides³. Moreover, notwithstanding that a statute provides a remedy in an inferior court for breach of its provisions, the High Court has power to enforce obedience to the law as enacted by way of injunction whenever it is just and convenient to do so⁴. Where a statute merely creates an offence, without creating a right of property, and provides a remedy, a person aggrieved by commission of the offence is confined to that remedy, and cannot claim an injunction⁵, although proceedings may be brought by the Attorney General if the public interest is affected⁶. If the criminal activity does infringe a property right of a person, he has standing to enlist the civil court's aid in preventing that infringement. In assisting such a person the court is not compelling the observance of the criminal law as such; it is giving effect to a cause of action, at law or in equity, possessed by that person as owner of the property right⁷.

The High Court, however, has jurisdiction to grant a declaration⁸ and ancillary injunction⁹, notwithstanding that its effect is to establish the existence or nonexistence of a liability which could be enforced only in a court of summary jurisdiction.

353. Foreign states.

Subject to exceptions¹ a foreign state² is immune from the jurisdiction of the courts of the United Kingdom³. Relief cannot be given against a state by way of injunction⁴ except in two circumstances. The first is where the foreign state gives written consent⁵. The second is in relation to property which is for the time being in use or intended for use for commercial purposes⁶.

3 State Immunity Act 1978 s 1: see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 244 et seq. The basic principle at common law was that the courts would not implead a foreign sovereign: see Compania Naviera Vascongado v SS Christina [1938] AC 485 at 490, HL, per Lord Atkin; but cf I Congreso del Partido, Playa Larga (Cargo owners) v I Congreso del Partido (Owners) [1983] 1 AC 244, [1981] 2 All ER 1064, HL, where immunity was restricted.

5 See the State Immunity Act 1978 s 13(3). Submitting to the jurisdiction is not to be regarded as consent.

6 See the State Immunity Act 1978 s 13(4). This exception does not apply, other than in Admiralty actions in rem, to the property of a state party to the European Convention on State Immunity (Basle, 16 May 1972; Cmnd 5081) unless the process is for enforcing a judgment which is no longer subject to appeal or if given in default of appearance is not liable to be set aside and the state has made a declaration under art 24 of the convention, or the process is for enforcing an arbitration award: State Immunity Act 1978 s 13(4). Article 24 of the convention provides that a contracting state may declare that its courts shall be entitled to entertain proceedings against contracting states to the extent that its courts are entitled to entertain proceedings against non contracting states. A certificate by or on behalf of the Secretary of State is conclusive evidence as to whether a state is a party to the convention or whether it has made a declaration under art 24: State Immunity Act 1978 s 21(c). Reference to judgment in default of appearance includes reference to any corresponding procedure (eg judgment in default of giving notice of intention to defend): s 22(2).

354. Proceedings against the Crown.

In proceedings against the Crown, including proceedings for judicial review¹, the court has no power to issue an injunction, but may make an order declaratory of the parties' rights². In any civil proceedings the court has no power to grant an injunction or make an order against an officer of the Crown, if the effect would be to give relief against the Crown which could not have been obtained in proceedings against the Crown³.

(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions

A. GRANTING PERPETUAL RESTRICTIVE INJUNCTIONS

356. Injury must be continuous or irreparable.

Prima facie the court will not grant an injunction to restrain an actionable wrong for which damages are an adequate remedy¹. Where the court interferes by way of injunction to prevent an injury in respect of which there is a legal remedy², it does so upon either of two distinct grounds³: first, that the injury is continuous⁴ and second, that it is irreparable⁵. By 'continuous injury' is meant injury which would necessitate the bringing of a series of actions in order to obtain the damages to which such continual annoyance would entitle a claimant⁶. If it is a continuing injury the court will not refuse an injunction because the actual damage arising from it is slight⁷. By 'irreparable injury' is meant injury which is substantial and could never be adequately remedied or atoned for by damages or any other decree which the court may pronounce⁸. The fact that the claimant may have a right to recover damages is no objection to the exercise of the jurisdiction by injunction, if his rights cannot be adequately protected or vindicated by damages⁹. Even where the injury is capable of compensation in damages an injunction may be granted if the act in respect of which relief is sought is likely to destroy the subject matter in question¹⁰, and the mere fact that, in order to avoid litigation, a party has offered to take a sum of money as the price of his rights does not preclude him from asserting that he will suffer irreparable damage from the continuance of the act complained of¹¹. However, if the claimant has himself shown, by his conduct on a previous occasion, that the injury complained of is one which may in some way be compensated by money, the court may decline to grant an injunction¹².

357. Right at law must be established.

The general rule is that if a claimant applies for an injunction in respect of a violation of a common law right, and the existence of that right or the fact of its violation is denied, he must establish his right at law¹. Having done that, he is, except in special circumstances², entitled to an injunction to prevent a recurrence of that violation³. In certain cases the court may not require the claimant to establish his right at law, for instance where his title is not denied⁴, where the question of law should be decided on application⁵ or where there could be no possible defence or conflict of evidence⁶. It is not necessary to apply in the first instance for an interim injunction⁷. On the other hand, the court cannot grant an injunction before a right is acquired, even where it must be acquired within a short period⁸.

See also Re V (a Minor) (Injunction: Jurisdiction) [1996] 2 FCR 382 (in order to claim declaratory or injunctive relief it is not necessary to establish a cause of action, but nonetheless the plaintiff must be able to assert a legal right). Where the claimant is merely the equitable owner, and not the legal owner of property which is the subject matter of the proceedings, he may obtain interim protection for the property in the form of an interim injunction¹. However, before a perpetual injunction can be granted the legal owner must usually be joined as a claimant or, in the case of his refusal to be so joined, as a defendant².

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions/A. GRANTING PERPETUAL RESTRICTIVE INJUNCTIONS/359. Extent of damage and injury.

359. Extent of damage and injury.

An injunction may be granted even where no actual damage has been caused¹, and where the injury complained of has ceased after action brought, but before trial². However, where the alleged injury has ceased, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may refuse to interfere³. Mere interference with a legal right does not by itself entitle a claimant to an injunction⁴, nor does mere inconvenience⁵. There must be violation of an enforceable right⁶, and the violation must be of a substantial character⁷. An injunction will not be granted where the claimant has a remedy in his own power⁸. Where special damage is essential to the particular cause of action, the claimant cannot obtain an injunction unless he proves that special damage has been or will necessarily be occasioned to him by the act complained of⁹. Moreover, the court will not order a party to do an act unless it is satisfied that he is able to do it¹⁰, and sometimes, where the granting of the injunction would place the defendant in a position of extreme difficulty and might prove unnecessarily oppressive, instead of granting an injunction the court will make a declaration establishing the claimant's right to relief, and give the defendant a reasonable time to do what is necessary to cure the mischief, with liberty to the claimant to apply at the end of that time for an injunction¹¹.

360. When damage is small.

The fact that only very small or nominal damages have been recovered in the action is not, of itself, a sufficient ground for refusing an injunction¹, but it will be taken into consideration, for the court has regard to all the surrounding circumstances in considering whether or not it should grant an injunction, and does not confine itself to the strict rights of the parties². The mere fact that the injury suffered is small is not decisive in determining whether the court should grant damages or an injunction³.

However, the court will not interfere if the violation is so small, slight and formal that the claimant has no ground in conscience to complain of it⁴, but it requires a very clear case before the court will decline to interfere on the sole ground that the damage to arise from the breach would be inappreciable⁵. Interference with privacy is not a trivial matter⁶.

Proof of damage in an application to enforce a negative covenant by injunction is normally unnecessary⁷.

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions/A. GRANTING PERPETUAL RESTRICTIVE INJUNCTIONS/361. Negative and affirmative covenants and stipulations.

361. Negative and affirmative covenants and stipulations.

In the case of a negative covenant or stipulation the court will usually enforce compliance by injunction without regard to the question of convenience or the amount of damage caused¹. Where a covenant is affirmative and of a kind which the court will enforce by a decree for specific performance, that is normally the appropriate remedy. The court will, therefore, refuse an injunction unless the affirmative covenant is in substance negative or forms part of an indivisible contract containing another covenant which is negative².

1 See PARA 453 et seq. However, as to the position where the damage is inappreciable, see PARA 360.

2 As to positive and negative covenants see PARA 448 et seq. As to the origin of the remedy of injunction see EQUITY vol 16(2) (Reissue) PARA 477 et seq.

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions/A. GRANTING PERPETUAL RESTRICTIVE INJUNCTIONS/362. Threatened invasion of legal right.

362. Threatened invasion of legal right.

Where a claimant has established that he has a right which has been infringed and that further infringement is threatened to a material extent, he is entitled to an injunction to restrain the threatened infringement upon the ordinary principles upon which the court acts in granting injunctions¹. If the claimant's right to relief rests mainly on damage which has not been actually suffered but is likely to accrue within a reasonable time, the court will take that into consideration and grant an injunction². Therefore, although the claimant's legal right is not disputed, an injunction may be granted to restrain the commission of an apprehended or threatened act, on the ground that if the act is done it will violate the claimant's legal right, if he can show strong probability³ that the apprehended mischief will in fact arise⁴. However, no one can obtain a quia timet order by merely saying 'timeo'; he must aver and prove that what is going on is calculated to infringe his rights⁵. The mere fact that the defendant denies any intention of committing the act complained of is not of itself a sufficient ground for refusing relief⁶, but it is not sufficient ground for granting an injunction that, if there is no such intention, the injunction will do the defendant no harm⁷. An injunction will not be granted if the defendant, even though he asserts his right to do the act, not only says that he has no present intention of doing it but undertakes to give reasonable and sufficient notice before attempting to do it⁸. An injunction may also be refused where, on the defendant being served with the writ, the claimant is offered and may obtain all the relief that he seeks, and the offer is one which he ought to have accepted⁹. The court will not restrain future acts of a wrongdoer unless it is plain that they will be of a wrongful nature¹⁰. Where there seems to be no probability that the act complained of will be repeated, the court will sometimes make a declaration only, with liberty to apply for an injunction if necessary¹¹.

However, if the defendant claims and insists upon his right¹² or gives distinct notice of his intention¹³ or threatens¹⁴ or intends¹⁵ to commit an act which, if committed, would, in the court's opinion, violate the claimant's right, an injunction will be granted.

363. Effect of appeal pending.

The fact that an appeal¹ is pending is no bar to the granting of a perpetual injunction², at any rate where the court does not feel any doubt as to the justice of the decision under appeal³, nor is it, of itself, a sufficient ground for postponing the operation of the injunction⁴, although, if irreparable damage⁵ will be done to the appellant in the meantime, the operation of the injunction may be stayed on terms⁶. Mere inconvenience or annoyance is not enough to induce the court to take away from a successful party the benefit of his order⁷.

In an action to determine the rights of claimants to a fund there a jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain all dealings with the fund pending an appeal⁸. However, this jurisdiction⁹ ought to be very carefully exercised so as not to encourage anyone to present an appeal for the purposes of delay¹⁰.

B. DAMAGES IN LIEU OF INJUNCTION

364. Damages as additional or alternative relief.

Originally damages could only be obtained in a court of common law¹. Subsequently the Court of Chancery was empowered by statute in all cases in which it had jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction against a breach of any covenant, contract or agreement, or against the commission or continuance of any wrongful act or an application for performance², to award damages to the party injured, either in addition to or in substitution for an injunction or specific performance³. By virtue of those statutory provisions the High Court has power to award damages in lieu of an injunction where the injury is merely threatened and no wrongful act has been committed⁴. It also has power⁵, under its general jurisdiction, to award damages to a party who has been injured, either in addition to or in substitution for an injunction⁶.

1 As to damages see generally DAMAGES.

2 See generally SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

3 Chancery Amendment Act 1858 s 2. This Act, commonly known as Lord Cairns' Act, remained in force notwithstanding the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873: see Fritz v Hobson(1880) 14 ChD 542. The Chancery Amendment Act 1858 s 2 was repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act 1883 s 3, Schedule (repealed), but the repeal did not affect the jurisdiction established by the repealed enactment: s 5. A similar saving was contained in the Statute Law Revision Act 1898, which by s 1, Sch 1 Pt I repealed the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act 1883 s 5. By the combined effect of the above savings and of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 s 16 (repealed and replaced by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 18 (repealed); replaced by the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19), which vested the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in the High Court, the jurisdiction conferred by the Chancery Amendment Act 1858 s 2 remains in force: Sayers v Collyer (188) 28 ChD 103, CA (considered in Re R[1906] 1 Ch 730, CA); Dreyfus v Peruvian Guano Co(1889) 42 ChD 66; Leeds Industrial Co-operative Society Ltd v Slack[1924] AC 851, HL; see also Holland v Worley(1884) 26 ChD 578; Serrao v Noel(1885) 15 QBD 549, CA; Greenwood v Hornsey(1886) 33 ChD 471; Chapman, Morsons & Co v Auckland Union Guardians(1889) 23 QBD 294, CA; Dicker v Popham, Radford & Co (1890) 63 LT 379; Shelfer v City of London Electric Lighting Co, Meux's Brewery Co v City of London Electric Lighting Co[1895] 1 Ch 287, CA; Cowper v Laidler[1903] 2 Ch 337. 5 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 49, re-enacting the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 43 (repealed).

6 It is therefore no longer necessary in such a case to resort to the Chancery Amendment Act 1858 s 2: Sayers v Collyer(1884) 28 ChD 103, CA; Serrao v Noel(1885) 15 QBD 549, CA. The court's powers are now larger than those possessed under the Act of 1858 in so far as it is no longer necessary for the claimant to make out that he is entitled to an equitable remedy before he can obtain damages: see Elmore v Pirrie (1887) 57 LT 333 at 335 per Kay J. In a purely equitable claim damages may be recoverable even though the right to equitable relief has been lost by acquiescence: Landau v Curton (1962) 184 Estates Gazette 13.

365. Damages in quia timet actions.

The court has jurisdiction to grant damages in lieu of an injunction not only where the act complained of has been done and there is an intention to continue it¹ but also in a quia timet action, where the injury is merely threatened and no wrongful act has yet been committed². As a good working rule, damages in lieu of an injunction may be given (1) where the injury to the claimant's legal rights is small; (2) where that injury is capable of being estimated in money; (3) where that injury can be adequately compensated by a small money payment; and (4) where the case is one in which it would be oppressive to the defendant to grant an injunction³. However, the rule is not a universal one⁴, and it does not follow that damages must be given in all cases in which the above conditions are fulfilled⁵. In the case of a continuing actionable nuisance, the jurisdiction to award damages in lieu of an injunction ought to be exercised only in very exceptional circumstances⁶.

In cases of obstruction of light, if there is really a question whether the obstruction is a legal one or not, and if the defendant has acted fairly and not in an unneighbourly spirit, the court ought to incline to damages rather than to grant an injunction: see Colls v Home and Colonial Stores Ltd [1904] AC 179, HL.

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions/B. DAMAGES IN LIEU OF INJUNCTION/366. Damages in lieu are discretionary.

366. Damages in lieu are discretionary.

The power of awarding damages in lieu of an injunction is discretionary¹ and must be exercised with an intimate knowledge of the facts² and so as to prevent people being compelled to sell property against their will at a valuation³. Moreover, a defendant must not be encouraged to believe that he may do a wrongful act on the payment of a given sum in terms of money⁴. Where a breach of an express covenant is committed, either by the original covenantor or by an assignee who is bound by it, and causes substantial damage, the court has no discretion to award damages in lieu of an injunction⁵. The question whether the defendant knew that he was wrong is of importance⁶. His conduct may be a determining factor in deciding whether to grant an injunction or damages⁷.

The court may exercise its discretion to award damages either in addition to or in substitution for an injunction, whether or not damages have also been specifically claimed⁸.

INJUNCTIONS/(1) THE REMEDY AND THE JURISDICTION/(iii) Perpetual Restrictive Injunctions/B. DAMAGES IN LIEU OF INJUNCTION/367. Damages must cover same area as injunction.

367. Damages must cover same area as injunction.

Where damages are awarded in substitution for an injunction, then in order to be an adequate substitute, they must cover the whole area which would be covered by the injunction¹, and must therefore comprise damage accruing after, as well as before, the issue of the claim form², even as before the trial³, while in a purely quia timet action the damages will be solely in respect of injuries to be sustained at some future time⁴. Where an injunction is granted and the claimant also claims general damages merely as ancillary to the real remedy of injunction he is not entitled to substantial damages, but is entitled to recover something as an acknowledgment of the wrong he has suffered⁵.

In an action for an injunction and compensation in damages, if the substantial relief claimed is obtained before the action comes on for hearing, the claimant will not be deprived of his right to damages in respect of the claim by the defendant's delay in rectifying the injury⁶.

368. Smallness of damage not decisive.

The mere fact that the damage is small is not decisive¹, but if the court is of opinion that the claimant's property will remain substantially as useful to him as before the act complained of, and that, without taking his property away from him, the injury can be compensated by money, an injunction need not be granted².

369. Effect of resulting benefit.

Whilst the court may not regard an injury as compensated for by a benefit which results from it, the fact that a benefit does result to the claimant from the act complained of is an element to be considered in deciding whether an injunction should be granted or whether damages should be awarded¹.

Where an injunction is asked for on the ground that damages do not afford an adequate remedy, damages in respect of past injury may be given in addition to the injunction¹, but an inquiry as to damages will not be ordered if the claimant has opened a case of substantial injury, entitling him to an injunction and damages, and has failed to prove any substantial damage².

371. Measure of damages.

No money awarded in substitution for an injunction can be justly awarded unless it is at any rate designed to be a preferable equivalent to an injunction and therefore an adequate substitute for it¹. The general principles governing the measure of damages are discussed elsewhere in this work², and a few examples here will suffice. For instance, where a claimant was entitled to damages for breach of confidence in respect of confidential information used by the defendant, the court directed that the damages should be assessed on the market value of the information as between a willing buyer and a willing seller³.

In a case of breach of a restrictive covenant, the court ordered that the damages should be such a sum as might reasonably have been demanded as a quid pro quo for relaxing the covenant⁴. Where a defendant extended a right of way unlawfully, he was held liable to pay an amount of damages which, so far as could be estimated, was equivalent to a proper and fair price which would be payable for the acquisition of the right of way in question⁵.

C. ACQUIESCENCE AND DELAY

373. Acquiescence.

An injunction may be refused on ground of the claimant's acquiescence in the defendant's infringement of his right¹. The principles on which the court will refuse interim or final relief on this ground are the same², but a stronger case is required to support a refusal to grant final relief at the hearing³. The fact that a person did not interfere to prevent a small and limited breach does not preclude him for all time in respect of a wider and more important breach⁴. If a person stands by and knowingly, but passively, encourages another to expend money under an erroneous belief as to his rights, and then comes to the court for relief by way of a perpetual injunction, it will be refused and he will be left to his remedy, if any, in damages⁵.

Acquiescence will be taken into account in considering whether an injunction or damages should be granted⁶, and an amount of acquiescence, not sufficient to bar the action, may be sufficient to induce the court to give damages instead of an injunction⁷. A claimant may preclude himself by his acquiescence from recovering more than nominal damages⁸.

A person may so encourage that which he afterwards complains of as a nuisance as not only to preclude himself from complaining of it, but to give the adverse party a right to protection in the event of complaint⁹.

1 See PARAS 382 (mandatory injunction) and 388 et seq (interim injunction). The real test is whether on the facts of the particular case the situation has become such that it would be dishonest or unconscionable for the claimant to continue to seek to enforce the right: Shaw v Applegate[1978] 1 All ER 123, [1977] 1 WLR 970, CA. It seems that the test as to acquiescence is the same in respect of legal and equitable rights: Habib Bank Ltd v Habib Bank AG Zurich[1981] 2 All ER 650, [1981] 1 WLR 1265, CA; but cf Shaw v Applegate[1978] 1 All ER 123, [1977] 1 WLR 970, CA; and see Clegg v Edmondson (1857) 8 De G M & G 787.

The reason is that at the hearing of the cause it is the court's duty to decide upon the rights of the parties, and the dismissal of the action on the ground of acquiescence amounts to a decision that a right which once existed is absolutely and forever lost: Johnson v Wyatt (1863) 2 De G J & Sm 18; and see Gordon v Cheltenham and Great Western Union Rly Co (1842) 5 Beav 229. 374. Delay.

Although delay in applying to the court excites the court's diligence to ascertain whether the claimant has stood by and voluntarily allowed his right to be infringed, it is not sufficient to deprive the claimant of his right if it can be satisfactorily explained¹ and the right is not statute-barred². The court will not lightly act so as to deprive a claimant of an established right. There must be fraud or such acquiescence as, in the court's view, would make it a fraud afterwards to insist on the right³, but long abstention from the assertion of his right, coupled with an alteration of the condition of other parties, may render it unconscientious on the claimant's part to enforce it⁴.

375. Delay where Attorney General is claimant.

Where the Attorney General is suing on behalf of the public¹, the court as in other cases has a discretion², and, although delay will not affect the Attorney General as much as a private individual, it is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether the court should interfere³. Delay on the relator's part is not necessarily to be attributed to the Attorney General⁴, and where the defendant is shown to have acted outside a statutory power, an injunction will be granted notwithstanding lapse of time where the effect of refusing would be that the defendants would have acquired a statutory right by lapse of time, which the statute had not given them⁵.

(iv) Mandatory Injunctions

376. Power to grant mandatory injunctions.

It has been said that the power of granting mandatory injunctions must be exercised with the greatest possible care¹, but every injunction, whether restrictive or mandatory, ought to be granted with care and caution, and no more care or caution is required in the case of a mandatory injunction than a restrictive injunction². The court has no more hesitation in granting a mandatory injunction in a proper case than any other injunction³, and has frequently granted one in order, for instance, to remove obstructions to light⁴. The court may grant a mandatory injunction upon the trial of the action⁵, or in certain circumstances upon an interim application⁶.

377. Circumstances in which mandatory injunctions will be granted.

Where the injury done to the claimant cannot be estimated and sufficiently compensated for by damages¹, or is so serious and material that the restoration of things to their former condition is the only method whereby justice can be adequately done², or where the injury complained of is in breach of an express agreement³, the court will exercise its jurisdiction and grant a mandatory injunction⁴, even though the expense and trouble of obeying the injunction will be far in excess of any sum which could reasonably be awarded by way of damages⁵. However, a defendant cannot by means of a mandatory injunction be ordered to take legal proceedings against a third person⁶. If, on the other hand, no substantial damage is proved, or the injury admits of estimation and can be compensated for by damages, a mandatory injunction will not be granted but the court will assess damages or an inquiry will be ordered to ascertain the amount of the damages sustained⁷.

On a subsequent application for a mandatory injunction it was held that as the costs of maintaining the remedial works were not recoverable under the inquiry as to damages, the claimant was entitled to a mandatory injunction to remedy the existing defects in the remedial works.

378. Mandatory injunctions on interlocutory applications.

A mandatory injunction can be granted on an interlocutory application¹ as well as at the hearing², but, in the absence of special circumstances, it will not normally be granted³. However, if the case is clear and one which the court thinks ought to be decided at once⁴, or if the act done is a simple and summary one which can be easily remedied⁵, or if the defendant attempts to steal a march on the claimant⁶, such as where, on receipt of notice that an injunction is about to be applied for, the defendant hurries on the work in respect of which complaint is made so that when he receives notice of an interim injunction it is completed⁷, a mandatory injunction will be granted on an interlocutory application⁸.

The court will not grant an injunction requiring a defendant (1) to perform personal services¹; (2) to do repairs²; (3) to do an act which requires the continuous employment of people³; or (4) to carry on a business⁴, except in special circumstances⁵. It will not impose an obligation to do something which is impossible, or which cannot be enforced, or which is unlawful⁶.

It is provided by statute that no court may by injunction restraining a breach or threatened breach of a contract of employment, compel an employee to do any work or attend at any place for the doing of any work⁷.

380. Grant of injunction although act completed.

A mandatory injunction may be granted even though the act sought to be restrained has been nearly or entirely completed before the action is begun¹, but it will only be granted in such cases to prevent very serious damage². Where a building is the subject of the litigation it is material to consider, among other circumstances of the case, the condition in which the building was when complaint was first made³. The court may even order a building to be pulled down even though it has been erected and completed and works carried on within it for some months without complaint⁴, but it will not readily do so⁵.

But see A-G v Parish [1913] 2 Ch 444, CA, where, although the case was trivial, a mandatory injunction was granted because the defendant had deliberately built in defiance of a building line settled by the local authority.

3 Lawrence v Horton (1890) 59 LJ Ch 440. Even where the injury sustained is not such as would justify a mandatory injunction, the mere fact that the building has been completed before action brought does not prevent the court from giving damages: City of London Brewery Co v Tennant (1873) 9 Ch App 212; Lady Stanley of Alderley v Earl of Shrewsbury (1875) LR 19 Eq 616; and see Cooper v Hubbuck (1860) 7 Jur NS 457.

381. Effect of notice of objection.

If distinct notice of objection is given before the completion of the act complained of, but it is nevertheless persisted in¹, or if the defendant on an interlocutory application gives an undertaking to undo what he has done if so ordered at the trial², the court is more disposed to grant a mandatory injunction than where no complaint is made until after the completion. However, every case depends upon its own peculiar circumstances, and the mere fact that the act complained of was persisted in after notice of objection was given is not of itself sufficient to justify the granting of a mandatory injunction if, in all the circumstances, damages would be an adequate remedy³.

382. Acquiescence and delay.

A person seeking a mandatory injunction should apply promptly, but mere delay is not a bar if it can be satisfactorily accounted for¹, nor will a claimant be deemed to have acquiesced if, knowing that the defendant has a right to do a thing, he assumes that he is not going to use his right for an unlawful purpose². However, a mandatory injunction will not be granted where the claimant is guilty of unreasonable delay in applying for it and granting it would cause the defendant serious damage³.

(v) Interim Injunctions

A. GRANTING INTERIM INJUNCTIONS

383. Principles upon which the court acts.

On application for an injunction in aid of a claimant's alleged right, the court will usually wish to consider whether the case is so clear and free from objection on equitable grounds that it ought to interfere to preserve property without waiting for the right to be finally established¹. This depends upon a variety of circumstances, and it is impossible to lay down any general rule on the subject by which the court ought in all cases to be regulated²; but in no case will the court grant an interim injunction as of course³.

The tendency is to avoid trying the same question twice and to grant injunctions only in clear cases. However, where there is no doubt as to the legal rights an interim injunction will be granted, and it is no objection that the relief so granted is substantially the same as the whole relief claimed in the action except that it is only to endure until the hearing of the action⁴. It is not necessary that the court should find a case which would entitle the claimant to relief at all events⁵; it is quite sufficient for it to find a case which shows that there is a substantial question to be investigated⁶, that interim interference on a balance of convenience and inconvenience to the one party and to the other is expedient⁷ and that the status quo⁸ should be preserved until that question can be finally disposed of⁹.

An interim injunction is intended to be temporary in its character, and any person at whose suit such an injunction is obtained is under an obligation to limit, so far as possible, the time during which it is operative: Portway Press Ltd v Hague [1957] RPC 426. As to the power of the court to grant an interim injunction to the defendant before service of a counterclaim see Marcus Publishing plc v Hutton-Wild Communications Ltd [1990] RPC 576, CA.

2 Saunders v Smith (1838) 3 My & Cr 711; and see Dalglisch v Jarvie (1850) 2 Mac & G 231. Each case must be decided on a basis of fairness, justice and common sense in relation to the whole of the issues of fact and law which are relevant in the particular case: Hubbard v Vosper [1972] 2 QB 84, [1972] 1 All ER 1023, CA. Doubt as to whether a permanent injunction will be granted at the trial does not, as a matter of law, preclude the issue of an interim injunction: Evans Marshall & Co Ltd v Bertola SA [1973] 1 All ER 992, [1973] 1 WLR 349, CA. If circumstances justify such a course, a court will make at an interim stage an order which will not be appropriate at the final trial: Fresh Fruit Wales Ltd v Halbert (1991) Times, 29 January, CA. The grant of interim injunctions in actions for infringement of patents is governed by the same principles as in other actions: American Cyanamid Co v Ethicon Ltd [1975] AC 396, [1975] 1 All ER 504, HL; Carroll v Tomado Ltd [1971] RPC 401. As to mandatory injunctions on interim applications see PARA 378.

3 Potter v Chapman (1750) Amb 98. The minority of the claimant may in some circumstances be a factor in deciding whether relief should be given: see Chaplin v Leslie Frewin (Publishers) Ltd [1966] Ch 71; revsd on appeal [1966] Ch 71, [1965] 3 All ER 764, CA. A plaintiff in whose favour an interim injunction has been made is not entitled to rest upon that injunction and assume that in the absence of complaint the defendant is prepared to treat it as permanent without any further steps being taken: Newsgroup Newspapers Ltd v Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd [1991] FSR 487. An interim injunction may be granted on a claim for a declaration: Newport Association Football Club Ltd v Football Association of Wales Ltd [1995] 2 All ER 87. An interim injunction can be granted where it is unlikely that the relevant issue will come to trial given that the injunction itself provides final relief: Choudhry v Treisman [2003] EWHC 1203 (Ch), [2003] 22 LS Gaz R 29, (2003) Times, 2 May (injunction to require nomination for local government election). Where a judge dismisses an application for an interim injunction he nevertheless has jurisdiction to grant the unsuccessful applicant an injunction pending an appeal against the dismissal; it is not necessary for the applicant to apply to the Court of Appeal: Erinford Properties Ltd v Cheshire County Council[1974] Ch 261, [1975] 2 All ER 448; and see PARA 363.

6 The court must be satisfied that there is a serious question to be tried. The material available to the court at the hearing of the interlocutory application must disclose that there are real prospects of success in the claim for the permanent injunction at the trial: American Cyanamid Co v Ethicon Ltd[1975] AC 396, [1975] 1 All ER 504, HL. 384. Threatened injury.

An interim injunction will be granted to restrain an apprehended or threatened injury¹ where the injury is certain or very imminent, or where mischief of an overwhelming nature is likely to be done², especially destructive operations³. The court will interfere if the thing sought to be prohibited is in itself a nuisance⁴ or, although not in itself a nuisance, will manifestly end in such a nuisance as the court normally restrains⁵. Where the mischief sought to be restrained is not in itself noxious, but only something which may prove to be so, an interim injunction will not be granted⁶.

385. Serious question to be tried.

On an application for an interim injunction the court must be satisfied that there is a serious question to be tried¹. The material available to the court at the hearing of the application must disclose that the claimant has real prospects for succeeding in his claim for a permanent injunction at the trial². The former requirement that the claimant should establish a strong prima facie case³ for a permanent injunction before the court would grant an interim injunction has been removed⁴.

Where the application is to restrain the exercise of an alleged right, the claimant should show that there are substantial grounds for doubting the existence of the right⁵. It requires a very strong case indeed to induce the court to interfere with an admitted right upon an alleged equity⁶.

The claimant must also be able to show that an injunction until the hearing is necessary to protect him against irreparable injury⁷; mere inconvenience is not enough⁸.

386. Balance of convenience.

Unless the material available to the court at the hearing of the application for an interim injunction fails to disclose that the claimant has any real prospect of succeeding in his claim for a permanent injunction at the trial, the court should go on to consider whether the balance of convenience lies in favour of granting or refusing the interim relief that is sought¹.

In order to determine where the balance of convenience² lies the court must weigh two matters. The first is to protect the claimant against injury by violation of his rights for which he could not be adequately compensated in damages recoverable in the action if the uncertainty were resolved in his favour at the trial. The second matter is the defendant's need to be protected against injury resulting from his having been prevented from exercising his own legal rights for which he could not be adequately compensated under the claimant's undertaking in damages³ if the uncertainty were resolved in the defendant's favour at the trial⁴.

Where there is a clear breach the question of the balance of convenience does not arise⁵. Where the grant or refusal of an interim injunction will have the practical effect of putting an end to the action the degree of likelihood that the claimant would have succeeded in establishing his right to an injunction if the action had gone to trial is a factor to be brought into the balance by the judge in weighing the risks that injustice may result from his deciding the application one way rather than the other⁶.

386 Balance of convenience

NOTE 2--The balance of convenience is likely to lie with the police where the injunction would hinder an ongoing criminal investigation: Faisaltex Ltd v Chief Constable of Lancashire Constabulary [2009] EWHC 1884 (QB), [2009] 1 WLR 1687, [2009] All ER (D) 151 (Aug) (injunction to extend protocol concerning inspection of seized material refused).

387. Conduct of parties.

In considering whether an interim injunction should be granted, the court has regard to the conduct and dealings of the parties before application was made by the claimant to preserve and protect his right¹, since the jurisdiction to interfere, being purely equitable, is governed by equitable principles².

388. Acquiescence.

Acquiescence¹ by the claimant in the defendant's conduct may prevent the grant of an injunction², especially when the defendant has incurred expenditure in the meantime³. The weight to be attached to the length of time which has elapsed must in a great degree depend upon the amount of expenditure⁴.

389. Assertion of claim.

The mere notice¹, or even the continual assertion of a claim², unaccompanied by any act to enforce it, will not keep alive a right which would otherwise be precluded by acquiescence; but if a defendant has acted with full knowledge of the claimant's rights³, or has incurred expenditure under full notice that the work was objected to and that steps would be taken to put a stop to it⁴, he will not be entitled to rely upon the claimant's acquiescence.

390. When acquiescence is no bar.

Acquiescence is no bar to an injunction if it can be satisfactorily accounted for¹, as for example where the claimant has assumed that the defendant, having a right, would not use it so as to injure the claimant and his assumption is justifiable², or has acquiesced in what he has been led to consider was merely a temporary violation of his right³, or has endeavoured to come to an amicable arrangement with the defendant⁴, or where the defendant has falsely represented to the claimant that the injury complained of would not result from his operations⁵, or has led the claimant to believe that the evil would be remedied⁶. The claimant will not be deemed to have acquiesced in the claims of others unless he was fully cognisant of his right to dispute them⁷, nor where he has assented to the act complained of under an erroneous opinion and view and in ignorance of the consequences⁸. The fact that the claimant has acquiesced in a state of things while it produced little injury to him does not constitute such acquiescence as would debar him from obtaining an interim injunction in the event of the injury being substantially increased⁹.

391. Acquiescence by one of several claimants.

The acquiescence on the part of one of several claimants may preclude the court's interference upon an interim application¹. The court will frequently refuse an injunction where it acknowledges the right if it considers that the conduct of the claimant, not only with the party with whom the contest exists, but with others, has led to the state of things which occasions the contest². The effect of knowledge and acquiescence is the same in the case of a company as in the case of a private individual³.

392. Delay.

A claimant must be able to show that he has not been guilty of improper delay¹ in applying to the court, for delay, even if not amounting to acquiescence, may deprive him of the right to an interim injunction².

393. Refusal of application in case of doubt.

Where it is impossible to form any opinion as to whether or not the act complained of will amount to an actionable wrong, an application for an interim injunction will not be allowed to stand over until the act in question has been so far executed that its character may be judged, but will be refused at once¹.

B. EXTENT OF AND TERMS ON WHICH INTERIM INJUNCTIONS WILL BE GRANTED

394. Extent of restraint.

In dealing with an interim application the court will confine itself strictly to the point which it is called upon to decide, and will express its opinion on the case only so far as is necessary to show the grounds upon which the interim application is disposed of¹, and, in the absence of very special circumstances, will impose only such restraint as will suffice to stop the mischief and keep things as they are until the hearing².

See C v K (Ouster Order: Non-Parent) [1996] 3 FCR 488 (woman sought injunction ousting man from council house in which they lived separately but as joint tenants; question of ousting postponed but application not dismissed pending outcome of applications for lesser injunctions with provision for monitoring behaviour).

395. Undertakings.

The court will take care that the order for an injunction is so framed that neither party will be deprived of the benefit he is entitled to, if in the event it turns out that the party in whose favour it was made is in the wrong¹. For this purpose the court will, if necessary, impose terms upon the claimant as a condition of granting the injunction². He may also be required to undertake to prosecute the action with due diligence³ or, if the action has reference to the payment of money, to pay the amount in dispute into court⁴.

Similarly it may impose terms upon the defendant as a condition of withholding the injunction⁵. Thus, he may be required to undertake to keep an account, and in the event of the claimant establishing his case to pay such sum as the court directs⁶, or to give reasonable notice of his intention to build and to produce plans⁷, or not to do or continue the act complained of in the meantime⁸, or to abide by any order the court may make as to damages⁹ or as to pulling down the structure complained of¹⁰, or to make certain admissions for the purposes of the trial¹¹. Where the act complained of involves the making of profits, an undertaking by the defendant to keep an account is almost invariably required¹². The injunction may be suspended to enable the defendant to carry out an undertaking¹³.

(vi) Freezing Injunctions and Search Orders

A. FREEZING INJUNCTIONS

396. In general.

Under its wide power to grant an injunction without notice or an interim injunction¹ the court has jurisdiction to grant such an injunction so as to prevent a defendant from disposing of assets in order to defeat a judgment². This power depends not on the territorial jurisdiction of the court over assets in England but on the unlimited jurisdiction of the English court in personam³ against any person whether an individual who or a corporation which is, under English procedure, properly made a party⁴ to proceedings⁵ in the English court⁶.

Accordingly, an order may be made before⁷ or after⁸ judgment against a defendant, whether or not based in England⁹, to restrain the removal of assets from the jurisdiction¹⁰, the disposal of or otherwise dealing with¹¹ assets within the jurisdiction¹² in such a way as to place them beyond the reach of the claimant¹³, or exceptionally to restrain dealing with assets outside the jurisdiction¹⁴. In an appropriate case the court has power to order the transfer of assets to a jurisdiction in which the order of the English court after the trial of the action will be recognised from a jurisdiction in which that order will not be recognised¹⁵.

1 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1); the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1) (amended by the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1991 s 3, Sch 2 para 12; and SI 2001/3929); and PARA 347 et seq. See also PARAS 315 head (6), 318; and FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS vol 49 (2008) PARA 998 et seq. As to the prospective citation of the Supreme Court Act 1981 as the Senior Courts Act 1981 see PARA 8 note 1.

The Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25 confers jurisdiction on the English courts to grant interim relief including a freezing injunction in aid of proceedings which have been commenced in a convention country other than the United Kingdom without any limit to the retrospective operation of the power: Alltrans Inc (formerly known as Trans Freight Lines Inc) v Interdom Holdings Ltd (Johnson Stevens Agencies Ltd, third parties) [1991] 4 All ER 458, CA. A freezing injunction may be available under that provision even where a foreign court trying the substantive dispute would not be able to make a similar order: Crédit Suisse Fides Trust SA v Cuoghi [1998] QB 818, [1997] 3 All ER 724, CA (world-wide freezing injunction granted, although no similar relief available in Swiss proceedings). Unless specifically excluded by the arbitration agreement, the court has the power to grant a freezing injunction by way of ancillary relief in arbitral proceedings: Re Q's Estate [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 499. As to the general principles which are to apply when the court is asked to grant an asset-freezing order ancillary to proceedings in a foreign jurisdiction pursuant to the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25 see Ryan v Friction Dynamics Ltd (2000) Times, 14 June; and as to the approach to be adopted by members of the legal profession in the United Kingdom when requested by overseas lawyers to pursue such an order see Lewis v Eliades (2002) Times, 28 February. In deciding the proper scope of any interim relief under the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25 it is necessary to have regard to the nature of the substantive proceedings and their possible outcome in order to ensure that an order made in the instant jurisdiction would be effective to achieve its purpose; the principle which underpins s 25 is that the court should be willing to assist the courts of other jurisdictions by providing such interim relief as would be available if it were itself seised of the substantive proceedings: Kensington International Ltd v Republic of Congo [2007] EWCA Civ 1128, [2008] 1 All ER (Comm) 934, [2008] 1 WLR 1144. See also ETI Euro Telecom International NV v Republic of Bolivia [2008] EWCA Civ 880, [2008] 2 Lloyd's Rep 421, [2008] All ER (D) 358 (Jul); and Mediterranean Shipping Co v OMG International Ltd [2008] EWHC 2150 (Comm), [2008] All ER (D) 89 (Sep). An English court will not assist any action by a foreign state in civil proceedings to enforce a foreign penal or revenue law, but for the purposes of this rule the court must look at the substance of what is being sought to be enforced: United States Securities and Exchange Commission v Manterfield [2009] EWCA Civ 27, [2009] All ER (D) 225 (Jan).

2 CPR 25.1(1)(f)(i). The power was originally expressed in Mareva Compania Naviera SA v International Bulkcarriers SA, The Mareva (1975) [1980] 1 All ER 213n at 215, [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep 509-511, CA, per Lord Denning MR, and has now been enshrined in the Civil Procedure Rules. For other early examples see Nippon Yusen Kaisha v Karageorgis [1975] 3 All ER 282, [1975] 1 WLR 1093, CA; Rasu Maritima SA v Perusahaan Pertambangan Minyak Dan Gas Bumi Negara (Government of the Republic of Indonesia intervening) [1978] QB 644, [1977] 3 All ER 324, CA (for a historical survey see at 657, 331-332 per Lord Denning MR). See also Siskina (Cargo Owners) v Distos Compania Naviera SA, The Siskina [1979] AC 210, [1977] 3 All ER 803, HL. As to the form of injunction see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 6, Annex.

In Mareva Compania Naviera SA v International Bulkcarriers SA, The Mareva (1975) [1980] 1 All ER 213n, [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep 509, CA, the Court of Appeal held that the court's wide general powers to grant an injunction meant that contrary to observations in Lister & Co v Stubbs (1890) 45 ChD 1 at 13, CA, per Cotton LJ and 14 per Lindley LJ the court did have jurisdiction to protect a creditor before judgment. However, the purpose of a freezing injunction is not in any way to improve the position of claimants in an insolvency but simply to prevent the injustice of a defendant placing assets which might otherwise have been available to satisfy judgment out of the reach of the claimant: Iraqi Ministry of Defence v Arcepey Shipping Co SA, The Angel Bell [1981] QB 65, [1980] 1 All ER 480. A defendant in such an application is not to be treated like a judgment debtor: A J Bekhor & Co Ltd v Bilton [1981] QB 923, [1981] 2 All ER 565, CA; Derby & Co Ltd v Weldon (Nos 3 and 4) [1990] Ch 65, [1989] 1 All ER 1002, CA.

See Mercantile Group (Europe) AG v Aiyela [1994] QB 366, [1994] 1 All ER 110, CA (injunction to enforce judgment debt relating to one defendant granted against another defendant against whom claim abandoned because injunction was incidental to enforcement of debt). A freezing injunction is not intended to be used as an aid to obtaining preference for repayment from an insolvent party: see Camdex International Ltd v Bank of Zambia (No 2) [1997] 1 All ER 728, [1997] 1 WLR 632, CA (company sought to seize bank notes printed by national bank of third world country in order to 'hold the bank to ransom'; notes themselves had no market value). It may be within the scope of the court's power to grant a freezing injunction to require a company and its only effective officer to return money paid to the company: Yukong Lines Ltd v Rendsburg Investments Corp'n (No 2) [1998] 4 All ER 82, [1998] 1 WLR 294. As to a party's entitlement to apply without notice for a freezing injunction see Don King Productions Inc v Warren (No 2) (1998) Times, 18 June. On an application without notice, legal representatives have a duty to provide a full note of the hearing to any party affected by the grant of relief: Interoute Telecommunications (UK) Ltd v Fashion Gossip Ltd (1999) Times, 10 November.

A disclosure order contained in the injunction carries with it an obligation to do more than simply tell the truth: Bird v Hadkinson (1999) Times, 7 April. The jurisdiction can be invoked even where the defendant proposes a bona fide transfer of assets for a price in accordance with a valuation from an independent and respectable firm of accountants, although the courts must not be too ready to grant such relief: Customs and Excise Comrs v Anchor [1999] 3 All ER 268, [1999] 1 WLR 1139.

See also Dadourian Group International Inc v Simms (No 2) [2006] EWCA Civ 1745, [2007] 2 All ER 329, [2007] 1 WLR 2967 (use of information obtained from party against whom freezing order was made).

3 A freezing injunction does not operate as an attachment. It merely restrains the owner from dealing with the assets in certain ways: Cretanor Maritime Co Ltd v Irish Marine Management Ltd [1978] 3 All ER 164, [1978] 1 WLR 966, CA. See Standard Chartered Bank v Walker, TSB plc v Walker [1992] 1 WLR 561 (injunction to restrain shareholder from voting against resolutions upon which viability of company depended). It does not have any 'in rem' effect on the assets themselves or on the defendant's title to them: Derby & Co Ltd v Weldon (Nos 3 and 4) [1990] Ch 65, [1989] 1 All ER 1002, CA. But cf Z Ltd v A-Z and AA-LL [1982] QB 558, [1982] 1 All ER 556, CA, and Babanaft International Co SA v Bassatne [1990] Ch 13, [1989] 1 All ER 433, CA (in rem effect on third parties); see PARA 342.

4 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(3). See PARA 207 et seq; and the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1) (as amended: see note 1). The jurisdiction to grant freezing orders against third parties is not rigidly restricted to those cases in which the third party is in control of the assets of the defendant to the action: HM Revenue and Customs v Egleton [2006] EWHC 2313 (Ch), [2007] 1 All ER 606.

5 North London Ry Co v Great Northern Ry Co (1883) 11 QBD 30, CA; and see note 1.

The Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1) predicates that there is a cause of action in respect of which the court may make an order: Steamship Mutual Underwriting Association (Bermuda) Ltd v Thakur Shipping Co Ltd [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep 439n, CA; Ninemia Maritime Corp'n v Trave Schiffahrtsgesellschaft mbH & Co KG, The Niedersachsen [1984] 1 All ER 398; affd at 413, [1983] 1 WLR 1412, CA; cf Siskina (Cargo Owners) v Distos Compania Naviera SA, The Siskina [1979] AC 210, [1977] 3 All ER 803, HL; and see the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1) (as amended: see note 1). See Republic of Haiti v Duvalier [1990] 1 QB 202, [1989] 1 All ER 456, CA (no substantive relief claimed in England but injunction granted over assets representing proceeds of payments claimed in a foreign action). See A v B [1989] 2 Lloyd's Rep 423 where a conditional freezing order was granted at a time when the claimant had no cause of action but was to take effect when the cause of action arose. The claimant contracted to buy a vessel from a foreign defendant and pursuant to the contract had paid a deposit into an account in the joint names of the claimant and defendant. The claimant alleged that delivery might be in breach of contract. As the defendant had no assets within the jurisdiction the claimant sought the order to assist the claim in potential arbitration proceedings against the defendant. The order was to come into effect on delivery of the vessel. International arbitration proceedings are not 'proceedings' for the purpose of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25 to enable the English court to grant interim relief to preserve the outcome of arbitration proceedings: ETI Euro Telecom International NV v Republic of Bolivia[2008] EWCA Civ 880, [2008] 2 Lloyd's Rep 421, [2008] All ER (D) 358 (Jul).

It is not designed to improve the position of claimants in an insolvency (Iraqi Ministry of Defence v Arcepey Shipping Co SA, The Angel Bell[1981] QB 65, [1980] 1 All ER 480), or to bring to an end entirely a bona fide and established method of trading (Avant Petroleum Inc v Gatoil Overseas Inc [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep 236, CA), or to inhibit the ordinary course of business or to interfere with a defendant's ordinary transactions especially where third parties are involved (Normid Housing Association Ltd v Ralphs and Mansell and Assicurazioni General SpA (No 2) [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep 274, CA (bona fide settlement of claim)). Both pre-judgment and post-judgment worldwide freezing injunctions should be restricted so as to bind only the defendant personally and should contain a limiting provision to ensure that they do not purport to have an unintended extra-territorial operation and to ensure that only third parties affected are those who are within the jurisdiction and are able to prevent acts or omissions outside the jurisdiction in breach of the injunction or are within the jurisdiction of a foreign court which has declared it enforceable: Babanaft International Co SA v Bassatne[1990] Ch 13, [1989] 1 All ER 433, CA; Derby & Co Ltd v Weldon (Nos 3 and 4)[1990] Ch 65, [1989] 1 All ER 1002, CA. 397. Meaning of 'assets'.

There are no limitations put upon the word 'assets', from which it follows that this word includes chattels such as motor vehicles, aeroplanes¹, ships², machinery³, jewellery, objets d'art and other valuables as well as choses (or things) in action⁴. It includes the goodwill of a business⁵ and could well extend to the disposition of a freehold interest in a house⁶. A freezing injunction can cover any assets acquired between the grant of the injunction and the eventual execution of judgment⁷.

Assets do not include banknotes printed by the national bank of a third world country which are of value only to the bank, where to seize them would, effectively, hold the bank to ransom, possibly to the severe detriment of the country's precarious economy⁸. Assets do include those of which the defendant is the bare legal, but not the beneficial, owner⁹.

398. Criteria for grant.

A freezing injunction may be granted when (1) it appears likely that the claimant will recover judgment against the defendant for a certain or approximate item; and (2) there are also reasons to believe that the defendant has assets to meet the judgment in whole or in part but may well take steps designed to ensure that these are no longer available or traceable when judgment is given against him¹. It may also be granted where judgment has been given for the claimant and there are grounds for believing that the judgment debtor will dispose of assets to avoid execution².

399. Guidelines.

Those who apply for a freezing injunction should bear in mind the following guidelines¹:

- 521 (1) the claimant should make full and frank disclosure² of all matters in his knowledge³ which are material⁴ for the judge to know;
- 522 (2) the claimant should give particulars of his claim against the defendant, stating the ground of his claim⁵ and the amount thereof⁶, and fairly stating the points made against it by the defendant;
- 523 (3) the claimant should give some grounds for believing that the defendant has relevant assets⁷;
- 524 (4) the claimant should give some grounds for believing that there is a risk of the assets being dissipated before the judgment or award is satisfied⁸;
- 525 (5) the claimant must give an undertaking in damages in case he fails in his claim or the injunction turns out to be unjustified⁹.

It is an abuse of process to obtain a freezing injunction and then hold it with no intention of prosecuting the action¹⁰.

See The Motor Vessel P [1992] 1 Lloyd's Rep 470 (claimant must disclose to the court the intention not to disclose a without notice application to the defendant). Failing to disclose that the defendant has offered security for the claimant's claim amounts to a material non-disclosure, as it is contrary to the claimant's implicit request that the court's assistance is required to prevent the defendant from dissipating his assets: Gulf Interstate Oil Corp v ANT Trade and Transport Ltd of Malta, The Giovanna [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 97.

3 The duty of disclosure applies not only to material facts known to the applicant but also to any additional facts which he would have known had he made such inquiries: Brinks-MAT Ltd v Elcombe [1988] 3 All ER 188, [1988] 1 WLR 1350, CA. inextricably linked to the original claim that it is in the interests of justice for it to be heard: Aiglon Ltd v Gau Shan Co Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep 164.

400. Undertakings by claimant.

A claimant will normally¹ have to give an undertaking in damages as the price of the injunction². If a claimant wishes a third party to be bound by a freezing injunction³ he must give notice of it to that third party⁴. The claimant will normally be obliged to undertake as a term of the order to indemnify any third party against costs and expenses reasonably incurred by the third party in seeking to comply⁵ with the order as well as all liabilities which may flow from such compliance⁶.

401. Form and scope of order.

It is usual in the order to make an allowance for legal expenses and for ordinary living and business expenses¹ and to insert the maximum amount to be restrained in case the defendant has assets which exceed the amount of the claimant's claim².

In aid of a freezing injunction the court may make ancillary orders such as an order for disclosure of documents³ or to provide further information⁴ as to the defendant's assets, an order directing a party to provide information about the location of relevant property or assets or to provide information about relevant property or assets which are or may be the subject of an application for a freezing injunction⁵, a direction that the defendant attend for cross-examination on his affidavits⁶ or for delivery up of assets⁷. In order to prevent a defendant from quitting the court's jurisdiction with assets the High Court can issue a writ *ne exeat regno*⁸ to prevent a defendant leaving the country in conjunction with a freezing injunction⁹.

B. SEARCH ORDERS

402. In general.

The court has an inherent jurisdiction¹ to order a defendant to give permission² to the claimant to enter premises under the control of the defendant³ for the purposes of (1) inspecting documents or other articles⁴; or (2) taking custody of documents or other articles⁵ pending trial of the action or in aid of execution⁶. This power has now been given a statutory basis⁷.

Such orders are made without notice⁸ and are characterised by secrecy and there being no notice to the defendant of what is afoot⁹. Because their essence is surprise and because they operate drastically such orders are closely controlled by the court¹⁰.

1 Anton Piller KG v Manufacturing Processes Ltd[1976] Ch 55, [1976] 1 All ER 779, CA.

2 The order is an order on the defendant in personam to permit inspection: Anton Piller KG v Manufacturing Processes Ltd[1976] Ch 55 at 62, [1976] 1 All ER 779 at 784, CA, per Ormrod LJ. It is not a search warrant: see at 60, 782-783 per Lord Denning MR; and see East India Co v Kynaston (1882) 3 Bli 153. Cf Manor Electronics Ltd v Dickson[1988] RPC 618 (order which 'entitled' claimant's representatives to enter defendants' premises instead of requiring defendants to permit entry was defective).

3 The order does not order entry on premises unless they are in occupation or use by the defendants, so that the rights of other persons who may be interested in the property are fully protected: EMI Ltd v Pandit[1975] 1 All ER 418, [1975] 1 WLR 302.

4 These do not have to be the subject matter of the action but must be essential for the claimant's case: Yousif v Salama[1980] 3 All ER 405, [1980] 1 WLR 1540, CA; Emmanuel v Emmanue[1982] 2 All ER 342, [1982] 1 WLR 669 (order for possession of documents relating to spouse's financial position and sale of matrimonial property). Cf Kepa v Kepa(1983) 4 FLR 515 (order for entry into former matrimonial home to inspect documents relating to financial position and to value certain items).

5 The purpose of a search order is primarily preservation of evidence which might otherwise be removed, destroyed or concealed but it operates of course also as an order for discovery in advance of pleadings: Crest Homes plc v Marks[1987] AC 829, [1987] 2 All ER 1074, HL.

6 Distribution Automatici Italia SpA v Holford General Trading Co Ltd[1985] 3 All ER 750, [1985] 1 WLR 1066 (court can grant search order in aid of execution).

403. Pre-conditions for order.

There are three essential pre-conditions for the making of a search order. First, there must be an extremely strong prima facie case. Secondly, the damage, potential or actual, must be very serious for the applicant. Thirdly, there must be clear evidence that the defendants have in their possession incriminating documents or things, and that there is a real possibility that they may destroy such material before any application inter partes can be made¹.

404. Safeguards for the defendant.

Search orders are only granted upon clear and compelling evidence and a number of safeguards in the interests of preserving essential rights have been introduced¹. These safeguards include the following²:

- 526 (1) the order³ should be drawn so as to extend no further than the minimum extent necessary to achieve the purpose for which it is granted, namely the preservation of documents or articles which might otherwise be destroyed or concealed;
- 527 (2) it is essential that a detailed record of the material should always be required to be made by the solicitors⁴ who execute the order before the material is removed from the defendant's premises⁵;
- 528 (3) no material should be taken from the defendant's premises by the executing solicitors unless it is clearly covered by the terms of the order⁶;
- 529 (4) it is inappropriate that seized material the ownership of which is in dispute should be retained by the plaintiff's solicitors pending the trial; either a neutral officer of the court should be charged with the custody of such material or it should be delivered to the defendant's solicitors on their undertaking for its safe custody and production, if required, in court⁷;
- 530 (5) the affidavits in support of the order ought to err on the side of excessive disclosure⁸.

An undertaking is included in every search order not to use the material disclosed nor allow it to be used for any purpose other than the proper conduct of the action⁹.

2 Columbia Picture Industries Inc v Robinson [1987] Ch 38, [1986] 3 All ER 338. As to undertakings on interlocutory injunctions see PARA 419.

3 For a form of order see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.11, Annex.

4 The order allows the plaintiff's solicitors to enter the premises; cf EMI Ltd v Pandit [1975] 1 All ER 418, [1975] 1 WLR 302. If, as he normally will be, the solicitor is accompanied by one or more of the plaintiff's directors or employees or expert witnesses employed on their behalf they should, if possible, be named in the order and the order should provide for them to be identified to the defendant by the solicitor effecting service: Vapormatic Co Ltd v Sparex Ltd [1976] 1 WLR 939. See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A Annex, Search Order para 6.

5 See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.5(6), (7).

6 See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.5(1).

7 See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.5(4).

8 The affidavit must disclose very fully the reason the order is sought, including the probability that relevant material would disappear if the order were not made: see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 7.3(2). As to the duty to make full and frank disclosure on an application without notice see PARA 321. The absolute duty of full disclosure is one owed to the court and not to any party who may be affected by the proceedings: Digital Equipment Corp v Darkcrest Ltd [1984] Ch 512, [1984] 3 All ER 381. It will normally be expected that, where the defendant is a company, the plaintiff provides information on the nature of the company, its accounts and directors: Naf Naf SA v Dickens (London) Ltd [1993] FSR 424. The question whether or not there has been full disclosure should normally be dealt with at trial and not at the hearing between the parties: Dormeul Freres SA v Nicolian International (Textiles) Ltd [1988] 3 All ER 197, [1988] 1 WLR 1362. But cf Ali and Fahd Shobokshi Group Ltd v Moneim [1989] 2 All ER 404, [1989] 1 WLR 710 (Mareva injunction).

405. Privilege against self-incrimination.

Compliance with a search order may expose a defendant to the risk of criminal proceedings, which accordingly raises the issue of the privilege against self-incrimination¹. However, this privilege has been withdrawn in relation to the following civil proceedings in the High Court: (1) proceedings for infringement of rights pertaining to any intellectual property² or for passing off³; (2) proceedings brought to obtain disclosure of information relating to any such infringement or passing off⁴; and (3) proceedings brought to prevent any apprehended infringement of such rights or apprehended passing off⁵. In any such proceedings a person will not be excused from answering any question⁶ or from complying with any order made in them⁷ by reason that to do so would tend to expose that person, or his or her spouse or civil partner, to proceedings for a related offence⁸ or the recovery of any related penalty⁹. On the other hand no statement or admission made by a person in answering such a question or in complying with such an order will, in proceedings for any related offence or the recovery of any related penalty, be admissible in evidence against that person, or, unless they married or became civil partners after the making of the statement or admission, against the spouse or civil partner of that person¹⁰, although such a statement will be admissible in proceedings for perjury or contempt of court¹¹. These provisions apply to civil proceedings in the High Court including proceedings on appeals¹².

8 'Related offence', in relation to any proceedings to which the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 72(1) applies (see heads (1)-(3) in the text), means, in the case of proceedings under head (1) or head (2) in the text, any offence committed by or in the course of the infringement or passing off to which the proceedings relate or any other offence (involving fraud or dishonesty) committed in connection with that infringement or passing off; and in the case of proceedings within head (3), any offence revealed by the facts on which the claimant relies in those proceedings: s 72(5). The most important related offence is conspiracy to defraud or any similar offence involving fraud or dishonesty. In Rank Film Distributors Ltd v Video Information Centre [1982] AC 380, [1981] 2 All ER 76, HL, it was held that reliance could not be placed on the privilege against self-incrimination for breach of the Copyright Act 1956 s 21 (repealed), or a conspiracy to breach that provision. 406. Property or defendant out of jurisdiction.

As a search order acts in personam¹ the court has a discretion² to order disclosure and inspection of the contents of a flat abroad and an injunction to restrain the disposal or removal of those contents if the defendant is within the jurisdiction of the English court³. If a search order is sought against a foreign defendant in respect of foreign premises it is essential that the case is one in which leave for service out of the jurisdiction⁴ ought to be given since otherwise the court has no jurisdiction over the defendant. Where, however, a search order has been accompanied by leave for service out of the jurisdiction, the order should not be executed until the foreign defendant has been given the opportunity to set aside the leave for service out of the jurisdiction because until then the assumption of jurisdiction by the court is only provisional⁵.

407. Effect on defendant.

A search order does not involve forcible entry but would make the defendant liable for contempt proceedings if he disobeyed the order¹. A defendant can refuse immediate compliance with the order and instead make an urgent application to have the order set aside but, if this fails, he renders himself liable for proceedings for contempt². The proper course for an applicant seeking to challenge the order is to apply to the judge who made the order or to another High Court judge to discharge or vary it and to appeal to the Court of Appeal³ only after that application has been heard and determined⁴.

Where a defendant, acting on legal advice, makes an application to discharge or vary a search order and declines to allow execution in the meantime but at the same time makes a reasonable offer to protect the relevant documents for a short period to enable him to make his application and there is no evidence of subterfuge or impropriety, the defendant's refusal to allow execution until after his application will not justify a finding of contempt: see Bhimji v Chatwani [1991] 1 All ER 705. (2) PARTIES

408. Applicant must have sufficient interest.

An injunction will only be granted at the suit of a party having sufficient interest in the relief sought¹. If the injury complained of affects the public interest, the Attorney General² must be joined³, unless the claimant can show that the interference with the public right involves an interference with his private rights⁴ or that, although his private rights are not interfered with, he suffers special damage, peculiar to himself, from the interference with the public right⁵. Where the legislature has made special provision for the protection of a private individual he may sue without either joining the Attorney General or proving any particular damage⁶. The particular application of the above principles in relation to the restraining of ultra vires acts by corporations⁷, the restraining of nuisances on highways⁸ and of breaches of byelaws⁹, the restraining of public nuisances¹⁰ and the protection of rights of navigation¹¹ are considered elsewhere in this work.

A reversioner may obtain an injunction without joining his tenant as co-claimant¹² and a mortgagor in possession without joining his mortgagee¹³.

409. Where the Attorney General is a necessary party.

On receiving information of the infringement of any public right the Attorney General may bring proceedings¹. Where he is a necessary party² he may either bring proceedings himself or permit his name to be used by a person or body, known as the relator, who seeks to enforce the performance of the public duty or restrain the interference with the public right, such person or body being liable for costs³. Leave must be obtained from the Attorney General⁴ before the proceedings are brought⁵.

Any person may act as relator in the proceedings, and the absence of any interest in or injury to the relator affords no answer to that⁶. The Attorney General's right of action does not depend on the presence of a relator⁷.

410. Against whom an injunction may be granted.

If a proper case is made out for the exercise by the court of its jurisdiction, any person against whom a right of action exists¹ can usually be restrained by injunction². A mandatory injunction may be granted against a wrongdoer even if he is only acting as agent³.

The fact that a person claims as of right to be able to do an act, even though he has no present intention of doing it, is sufficient ground for making him a party to an action for an injunction to restrain him from doing it¹. Someone who has parted with his whole interest in the subject matter ought not to be made a party², but where a person has not parted with his interest until after the action has been begun against him, an injunction may be granted against him³. In an action for an injunction to prevent the violation of an agreement, the persons alleged to have made the agreement must be parties⁴. The legal owner of property should be joined in an application by the equitable owner for the purpose of obtaining a perpetual injunction, but need not be joined in an interim application⁵.

412. Absent parties and third persons.

The absence of persons who will benefit by an injunction will not prevent the court from granting one¹, but it will not be expressed so as to extend to persons who are not parties to the action², nor will it be granted in the absence of parties where it would operate injuriously against them³.

Although an injunction will not as a rule be granted against a person who is not a party to the action⁴, even if he attends court⁵, yet it may be granted against a person claiming title under an order made in the action. Thus a purchaser under a decree may be restrained from committing waste before completion⁶, or a tenant to whom a receiver appointed in an action has let part of the estates may be restrained from acting in breach of his tenancy agreement⁷, even though such a purchaser or tenant is not a party to the action. Where an injunction is granted against a sole defendant, acts by his employees and agents should usually be included in the order⁸. Where a person was threatening to aid and abet the defendant in committing a breach of an injunction, the court granted an injunction restraining him personally from so doing, without his being made a party⁹.

Where an injunction is granted against a company, an injunction, with costs, may also be granted against its secretary if he has been joined as a defendant and acknowledged service and adopted the company's defence, although no evidence is adduced to show that he took any personal part in the acts complained of¹⁰.

The position and rights of third persons or strangers to the suit will be taken into account¹¹, but the mere fact that a claimant sues at the instigation of another is not of itself sufficient to prevent him from obtaining an injunction on the merits of the case¹².

In the case of an interim injunction, where an order will affect a person other than the applicant or respondent, who did not attend the hearing at which the order was made and is served with the order, where such a person served with the order requests a copy of any materials read by the judge, including material prepared after the hearing at the direction of the judge or in compliance with the order or a note of the hearing, the applicant, or his legal representative, must comply promptly with the request, unless the court orders otherwise¹³.

(3) FORM OF ORDER

413. Language of the order.

As the right to an injunction is founded on the fact that injury is accruing to the claimant, that fact should be mentioned in the order¹. The court should see that the language of its order is such as to make it quite plain what it permits and what it prohibits². An order which prohibits someone from doing what he has no authority to do, without informing him of the limits of such authority, leaves the question undecided and to be discussed on an application for the breach of the injunction, and is irregular³. Liberty will not be given to the claimant to apply to the court in the event of the defendant's doing an act which will infringe the claimant's legal right, for if there is no present reason for the court's interference, it would be premature, and if reason afterwards arises, it must be the subject of another suit⁴.

However, if adequate protection cannot be given in any other way, an injunction may be granted in extensive terms⁵. An injunction to protect a right which is limited in duration should not be perpetual in form⁶.

The order will state on its face that if the defendant does not obey it he will be guilty of contempt of court and may be sent to prison⁷.

414. Form of interim order.

The form of an interim order is generally 'until judgment or further order'¹, except where the parties consent to treat the application as trial of the action. In lieu of an undertaking imposed by order, the defendant may give an undertaking in the terms of the injunction sought, or the operation of an injunction granted may be suspended²; in either case, directions for a speedy trial may be given. The claimant must normally give an undertaking in damages³.

1 See, however, *Allport v Securities Corp*n (1895) 64 LJ Ch 491. A date should be named in an order restraining proceedings on a bill of sale: Re Johnstone, ex p Abrams (1884) 50 LT 184; and see PARA 316.

415. Form of final order.

In addition to or, occasionally, in lieu of an injunction, the final order may contain a declaration of right or title. If the application is dismissed the order may direct an inquiry as to damages¹. The order may suspend or limit the operation of the injunction². Liberty to apply may be inferred in an interim order, but should be expressly inserted in a final order³. Directions as to costs may be included⁴.

Where the parties have agreed terms, the court may order that all further proceedings in the action be stayed, except for the purpose of carrying the terms into effect with liberty to apply for that purpose⁵.

416. Inclusion of acts of defendant's employees etc.

Although an injunction is claimed against the defendant alone, if necessary, the order will be extended, as of course, to acts of his employees¹ or solicitors², but not to acts of his tenants³ or undertenants⁴. The order in such a case should take the form of restraining the defendant from committing the prohibited acts by himself or his employees⁵, and not the form of directly restraining the employees from committing the acts: as they are not before the court it is not proper to make an order directly against them⁶.

417. Form of mandatory injunction.

It was formerly the practice of the Court of Chancery to word mandatory injunctions in an indirect prohibitory form, but now all such injunctions should be worded in the direct mandatory form, such as directing buildings to be pulled down and removed¹. There is now no distinction in principle between the negative and the positive form². When granting a mandatory injunction, except in certain cases³, the order must specify the time after service of the order (or some other time) within which the act is to be done⁴. The consequences of failure to do an act within the time specified may be set out in the order⁵.

419. Undertaking as to damages.

An undertaking as to damages is the price which the person asking for an interim injunction has to pay for it¹ and any order for an interim injunction, unless the court orders otherwise, must contain such an undertaking². By the undertaking the party obtaining the order undertakes to pay any damages which the respondent sustains which the court considers the applicant should pay³. The court may consider whether to require an undertaking by the applicant to pay any damages sustained by a person other than the respondent, including another party to the proceedings or any other person who may suffer loss as a consequence of the order⁴. As a general rule, the benefit of the undertaking applies to all the defendants, even though only one or some are restrained⁵. Where an undertaking is given to the court by the defendant in lieu of an interim order, there will be inserted in the order a cross-undertaking as to damages by the applicant unless the contrary is agreed and expressed at the time⁶.

2 See Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25A para 5.1; and PARA 316 note 7. Liquidators of a company may not be required to provide an unlimited cross-undertaking in damages but a cross-undertaking limited to an amount commensurate with the size of the company's assets where it would be sufficient to cover any realistic estimate of potential loss: Re DPR Futures Ltd [1989] 1 WLR 778. For an example of a case where an injunction was granted notwithstanding that the undertaking would have been worthless see Allen v Jambo Holdings Ltd [1980] 2 All ER 502, [1980] 1 WLR 252, CA. The court has a discretion not to require an undertaking in damages from the Crown and that special privilege afforded to the Crown as law enforcer not to give a cross-undertaking in damages on the grant of an interlocutory injunction also applies to other public authorities, including a local authority, when exercising a law enforcement function in the public interest: Kirklees Metropolitan Borough Council v Wickes Building Supplies Ltd [1993] AC 227, [1992] 3 All ER 717, HL. Although in family proceedings the applicant for an interlocutory injunction is not normally required to give an undertaking as to damages, such an undertaking may be required where one spouse seeks to restrain the use of property which, at least on the face of it, is vested in a third party: see W v H (Family Division: without notice orders) [2001] 1 All ER 300.

The claimant's undertaking as to damages on an order for an injunction remains in force notwithstanding the dismissal¹ or discontinuance of the action², and if the claimant ultimately fails on the merits the defendant is entitled to an inquiry as to the damages³ sustained by reason of the interim injunction⁴, unless there are special circumstances⁵. The undertaking applies, even if the claimant has not been guilty of misrepresentation, suppression or other default in obtaining the injunction⁶, and is equally enforceable whether the mistake in granting the injunction was on a point of law or on the facts⁷.

On making an order for an injunction, the court cannot compel the claimant to give an undertaking as to damages, but it can refuse to grant an injunction unless he does¹. 422. Undertaking by the Crown.

Where the Crown seeks by interim injunction to restrain a breach of the law, or to enforce what is prima facie the law of the land, the Crown should not generally be required to give an undertaking as to damages as a condition of being granted the injunction¹. However, where the Crown applies for an interim injunction to enforce or protect its proprietary rights, the ordinary rule applies and an injunction should not be granted unless the Crown chooses to give the usual undertaking².

423. Who may give an undertaking.

If the applicant is out of the jurisdiction, an undertaking on an order for an injunction must be given by his solicitor or some other responsible person¹. When the applicant is a limited company² or other corporation³ the undertaking should be given by counsel on behalf of the corporation. There is no established practice that where a company is in liquidation the liquidator must give a personal undertaking as to damages⁴. The undertaking should be given by counsel or by the parties appearing in person⁵ and, when given, it forms part of the order. In an application for a freezing injunction, it may be appropriate to require the applicant's solicitors, as well as the applicant, to give undertakings⁶.

424. Application for inquiry as to damages.

The time at which the application for an inquiry as to damages is made is material¹. It may be made when the injunction is dissolved or at the trial, but, if made when the injunction is dissolved, it will probably be ordered to stand over until the trial². Where an action is dismissed at the hearing it may be dismissed without prejudice to any application by the defendant in respect of damages; the defendant will then be required to show a prima facie case sufficient to justify an inquiry³. It may be made after the trial, but if so should be made speedily, and if not made within a reasonable time it may be refused⁴.

The damages must be confined to loss which is the natural consequence of the injunction in the circumstances of which the party obtaining the injunction has notice when he makes his application⁵.

425. What damages will be awarded.

Whenever an undertaking as to damages has been given and the claimant ultimately fails on the merits an inquiry as to damages will be granted unless there are special circumstances to the contrary¹. For example, an interim injunction may be dissolved for delay² or some cause which disentitles the claimant to an interim injunction, although not to relief at the trial. Regard must also be had to the amount of the damage and, if it is trifling or remote, the court will not be justified in granting an inquiry³, nor will it be ordered where the court can satisfy itself as to the amount of the damage without it⁴. Where an action is dismissed, but without costs, because the court thinks that it was rightly instituted, no inquiry will be ordered⁵.

The application to enforce an undertaking as to damages should be made in the High Court division in which the undertaking was given⁶.

426. Suspending an injunction.

If there is a possibility of the parties being able to come to some arrangement, the operation of an injunction may be postponed until a certain date¹; but not where the injunction applies solely to the erection or construction of new works in the future². When the difficulty of removing the injury is great³ or where a good deal of time must necessarily elapse to enable the defendant to comply with an injunction, without being put to grievous annoyance and expense, then, in granting a perpetual injunction, the court will postpone its operation for such time as may be necessary to enable him to comply with it, with liberty to any of the parties to apply in the meantime⁴. If an injunction is refused by a court of first instance but granted on appeal with its operation suspended, application for a further suspension should be made to the court of first instance⁵.

A. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST CORPORATIONS

427. Public corporations.

Corporations, other than the Crown¹, are amenable to the court's jurisdiction in the same way as individuals². A public body incorporated by statute is a corporation only for the purposes for which it has been established, and whatever it does beyond the scope of those purposes is ultra vires and void³ and may be restrained by injunction⁴. For an injunction to be granted, except in an action brought by the Attorney General⁵, the claimant must establish an interest in preventing the defendant from doing what has been referred to as a violation of its contract with the legislature⁶. However, the court will not interfere so long as public bodies keep strictly within the limits of their powers and duties entrusted to them by the legislature⁷, act reasonably and in good faith⁸ and do not exceed their discretion unfairly⁹.

428. Companies.

In general an injunction may be ordered against a company regulated by the Companies Acts 1985 to 2006 where it would be ordered against an individual¹. In addition, an injunction may be directed against a company in relation to its powers or the conduct of its affairs as a corporation regulated by statute². If a company attempts to act ultra vires, it may be restrained by injunction at the instance of a shareholder³.

If the acts of a company amount to an injury or wrong to an individual member of the company, that member has a right of action against the company, and in a proper case may obtain an injunction against the company in aid of his right⁴.

The principles applicable to individuals trading under identical or similar names⁵ apply equally to companies⁶, and in a proper case a company will be restrained from using a style or name which is calculated to deceive⁷.

1 Where a company is used as a cloak to cover the activities of an individual, an injunction will lie against both: Gilford Motor Co Ltd v Horne [1933] Ch 935, CA.

2 For examples of where an injunction lies see text and notes 3-7.

429. Common law corporations.

The court's jurisdiction to interfere with the application of the property of a common law corporation is dependent upon the question whether the property is affected by a trust¹. If one can be shown to exist the court will interfere by way of injunction to prevent a breach of the trust², whether the corporation is lay or ecclesiastical³. The burden of proof lies upon the party seeking to establish the trust⁴.

430. Local authorities.

There is nothing in the statutes relating to local authorities¹ to exclude the court's ordinary jurisdiction to restrain ultra vires acts² or nuisance³ or to prevent breaches of trust⁴. Consequently, a local authority may be restrained from applying its funds for purposes⁵, or from dealing with its property in a manner⁶, not authorised by statute. The court also has jurisdiction to restrain an authority from making a rate if a proper case for the exercise of that jurisdiction is made out⁷, or to restrain the improper application of rates⁸. The fact that compliance with an injunction may depend on matters outside the authority's control may be no reason for refusing the injunction⁹. In deciding what order to make, the court will, however, take into account the important duties which a local authority is required to discharge and will suspend the operation of an injunction in a case where it is impossible or virtually impossible for the authority to comply with it immediately¹⁰.

433. Eleemosynary corporations.

In the case of an eleemosynary corporation established by charter or statute, the court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the persons having control of the charity unless they are committing breaches of trust in relation to the charity's property¹. Where the persons having control of the charity's funds or property are also visitors, they are, so far as there is a trust, also subject to the court's jurisdiction².

In the case of an ecclesiastical corporation, the court has no jurisdiction over visitatorial powers unless it finds a trust of property³, but, once it finds a trust, it may interfere, whether or not there is a visitor⁴.

Pending a suit to determine the right to nominate to a benefice⁵, or where the election of a vicar is declared void and a new election is directed⁶, the bishop may be restrained from presenting in the meantime⁷. If a person is improperly appointed to a benefice, the court can restrain the bishop from instituting the person so appointed⁸, and in a proper case a bishop can be restrained from interfering with a vicar in the enjoyment of his preferment⁹.

An injunction cannot be granted by the High Court to restrain persons who have presented a petition to the consistory court from doing that which, if they obtain a faculty, they will be entitled to do¹⁰.

B. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST UNINCORPORATED BODIES AND PARTNERS

434. Jurisdiction in relation to unincorporated bodies.

The court's jurisdiction to interfere in the case of clubs¹, societies², trade unions³ and other unincorporated bodies⁴ is based not only upon the right which the members have to the common use and enjoyment of the property which has been purchased or acquired by means of the funds contributed by them⁵, but also upon the court's jurisdiction to protect rights of contract⁶. Thus, the court has jurisdiction to restrain wrongful expulsion⁷, illegal division of funds⁸, misapplication of funds⁹ or acts which are ultra vires or otherwise illegal¹⁰. However, the court will only interfere by way of injunction if it is necessary to protect a proprietary right of a member or his right to earn his livelihood¹¹. Where the contract between the parties creates a purely personal relationship, it will not do so¹². Thus, a member of a proprietary club, in which members have no right of property, who has been expelled by a committee may not be able to obtain relief by way of an injunction even though the proceedings were irregular¹³.

435. Trade union and labour relations.

In general trade unions and employers' associations can sue and be sued in the same way as any legal entity¹.

The court may not grant an injunction without notice in the context of a trade dispute in the absence of the party against whom it is sought or any representative of his unless satisfied that all steps which in the circumstances were reasonable have been taken with a view to securing that notice of the application and an opportunity of being heard with respect to the application have been given to him². The court must consider the likelihood of success by the party against whom an injunction is sought of establishing at the trial of the action a defence based on acts done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute or on peaceful picketing³.

436. Jurisdiction in relation to partners.

The court will restrain a partner from violating the terms of his partnership contract or acting inconsistently with his duties as a partner, both during the partnership, whether or not dissolution is sought, and also after dissolution¹.

In the case of partnership proceedings, the appointment of a receiver operates to exclude all the partners from the management of the partnership affairs, whereas an injunction may be directed to some or one only of the partners; therefore, because the appointment of a receiver would be refused, it does not follow that an injunction restraining one or more of the partners from doing what is complained of would also be refused².

(ii) Restraint of Wrongs

A. RESTRAINT GENERALLY

437. Injunction as a historical remedy.

Historically an injunction has always been available as a remedy for nuisance, waste, trespass and interference with easements¹.

The principle upon which the court interferes by injunction, in cases of both public and private nuisance, is the inadequacy of the remedy at common law². If an action for damages will lie, then the remedy of injunction must be available if the nuisance is a continuing one³.

An injunction will generally be granted to restrain interference with an easement where the remedy of damages is insufficient, on the principle that the court will not compel the claimant to submit to what is virtually a compulsory purchase of his easement by awarding damages for its deprivation⁴.

B. WASTE

439. Threatened or apprehended waste.

An injunction to prevent any threatened or apprehended¹ serious² waste³ may be granted⁴ either before, at or after the hearing⁵ where it appears to the court to be just and convenient to do so⁶. The court's jurisdiction is not limited to cases where there is a right and remedy at law⁷, but extends also to equitable waste⁸ and to cases where there is an intervening legal estate or life interest⁹.

Where waste has been committed, the court will not decline to interfere merely because the defendant has ceased committing waste upon the action being brought¹⁰. Where equitable waste of one kind only has been done or is threatened, the injunction will not be extended to equitable waste of other kinds¹¹.

440. Landlord and tenant.

Whether a tenant's liability is founded on waste or on implied contract¹, it can be enforced by an injunction² or damages³; and damages can be awarded for waste completed at the time of the action and an injunction granted against further waste⁴. To obtain an injunction against waste it is necessary to show that the waste will cause substantial injury to the reversion⁵, although damages may be awarded in a case where an injunction would be refused⁶.

A landlord can obtain an injunction against an underlessee⁷, but, unless given in lieu of an injunction, it seems that only damages are recoverable against the immediate lessee⁸.

441. Effect of delay.

An application to stay waste should be made promptly¹, especially in the case of mines², but delay is not so material here as in other applications for injunctions³. For example, even if a man allows half his trees to be cut down before he applies, the court will not permit the remaining half to be cut down⁴. However, if the party committing waste has been encouraged by the claimant's acquiescence to spend money and bestow labour upon the property, relief will be refused⁵.

C. TRESPASS

442. Trespass.

An injunction may be granted to prevent any threatened or apprehended trespass¹.

Where the trespass is of a trifling nature², where damages are a sufficient remedy³ or where the granting of an injunction would be oppressive, an injunction may be refused⁴. However, where damages are not an adequate remedy, an injunction may be granted even if the trespass causes little or no injury to the claimant⁵, although its operation may be suspended for a limited period if hardship would otherwise be caused to the defendant⁶. Where the defendant claims a right to enter upon the land in question, the court, in addition to or in substitution for damages⁷ or an injunction, may make a declaration concerning the claim⁸.

443. Trespass by bodies taking land.

Injunctions will be granted to restrain trespass by public companies or bodies having statutory powers compulsorily to take and enter land¹. As a general rule an injunction will not be refused where it is clearly shown that a public company is exceeding its powers², but if the company, acting in good faith, has made a mistake as to the land it has valued and taken and the question between the company and the landowner is merely one of value³, or, it seems, if the company has taken land in excess of its powers but the quantity and value of the land are extremely small⁴, the court may decline to interfere.

A private person⁵ cannot obtain an injunction on the mere ground of a deviation by the company on another's land in the construction of its undertaking, which is not injurious to him⁶.

444. Grant of injunction to reversioner.

A reversioner will only obtain an injunction if he can show that injury is occasioned to his reversion by the trespass¹. The question of injury or no injury is one for the court or tribunal which has to find the facts of the case, and where injury is found the reversioner may obtain an injunction without joining his tenant as co-claimant².

The court has jurisdiction to restrain the publication of defamatory statements, if necessary on an interim application¹, and even where no damage has actually accrued, provided it is imminent². However, an interim injunction will not be granted when the defendant swears that he will be able to justify the libel and the court is not satisfied that he may not be able to do so³.

Where a person acts in an office of a public nature in which he is not entitled to act, or acts or claims to be entitled to act as a member of a local authority or as mayor of a borough while disqualified, the High Court may grant an injunction restraining him from so acting¹. The application for the injunction must be made by way of application for judicial review². The court's permission must be obtained in order to proceed with a claim³. The court will generally, in the first instance, consider the question of permission without a hearing⁴. Where permission to proceed is given the court may also give directions⁵. The court may decide the claim without a hearing where all the parties agree⁶.

An injunction may be granted to restrain unlawful interference with contractual relationships or trade¹ or where there has been a breach of statute constituting a tort².

An infringement of a registered trade mark, or the passing off of goods, generally gives the right to an injunction to restrain its continuance³. Another wrong which may give grounds for an injunction is pollution, for instance the doing of something which changes the natural quality of water, such as the discharge of effluents, so as to pollute a river⁴.

(iii) Protection of Contractual Rights

A. PROTECTION GENERALLY

448. Positive and negative covenants.

Contracts, or the covenants continued in them¹, may be either affirmative or negative, or partly affirmative and partly negative.

As a general rule the proper remedy of a person seeking to enforce the observance of a positive contract is by way of an action for specific performance², unless it is either voluntary or otherwise of a kind which the court will not specially enforce³, such as a contract of service between employer and employee which will not be enforced against the employee⁴ or, as a general rule, against the employer⁵. On the other hand, where the contract or covenant is negative, his proper remedy is by way of an injunction to restrain the breach⁶, although the indirect result may be to enforce a positive stipulation in the contract⁷. In the case of a positive contract, the court will sometimes import a negative covenant not to do anything inconsistent with the contract, and grant an injunction to restrain the breach of this implied covenant⁸.

The court assumes jurisdiction to restrain a breach of contract because the remedy at law is not sufficient, and the party's interest requires that the act should be prevented instead of his merely receiving compensation in the shape of damages⁹.

See, however, Hughes v London Borough of Southwark[1988] IRLR 55, where an interim injunction was granted restraining employers from enforcing an instruction to employees to work outside the scope of their normal duties.

6 Cf William Robinson & Co Ltd v Heuer[1898] 2 Ch 451, CA; see also PARA 452. An injunction was granted to restrain an employee from working for a rival company his ten month paid notice period (Evening Standard Co Ltd v Henderson [1987] ICR 588, CA), but refused where an employee worked for a new employer in a field unrelated to that of his former employer, despite a covenant purporting to prohibit him from working for anyone else during the unexpired notice period (Provident Financial Group plc v Hayward[1989] 3 All ER 298, CA). A covenant negative in form may be affirmative in substance, and vice versa. The appropriate remedy for a breach will depend upon the substance and not upon the mere form: see PARA 463 et seq.

449. Injunction granted subject to equitable principles.

It is not every breach of contract or covenant that the court will restrain by injunction. The mere fact that the obligation and the breach are clear is not of itself sufficient to warrant interference, unless the obligation is itself of such a nature that it can be enforced consistently with the rules and principles upon which the court acts in granting relief. Thus the court will not restrain the breach of a covenant which would involve the court's supervision¹. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the breach of an indefinite², ambiguous and uncertain³ or vague⁴ covenant⁵, or of a negative covenant which is coupled with other terms so vague and loose that the court cannot execute them⁶. Nor will the court interfere where the covenant is oppressive⁷ or harsh⁸ towards the defendant, nor if the agreement in respect of which the breach has been committed is illegal⁹.

Relief will also generally be refused if the damage apprehended from the breach is not irreparable or is susceptible of pecuniary compensation¹⁰, or if the parties themselves treated the non-performance of the agreement as a subject for pecuniary compensation¹¹. The fact that compensation has been accepted for a violation will not debar the claimant from obtaining relief if there is in other respects a continued violation and there has been no acquiescence in that violation¹².

450. Penalty clauses.

Where a contract contains a clause providing for the payment of a sum of money in the event of a breach, the court's jurisdiction to restrain the breach by way of injunction will depend upon whether the sum was inserted to secure the performance of the contract or whether it was intended by the parties to be the fixed price for which the act complained of might lawfully be done. The question in every case is what is the meaning of the contract¹. If the intention is that the named sum should be treated as the fixed price at which the defendant buys the right to do the act complained of, then, whether it is described in the contract as liquidated damages or as a penalty², the court will not grant an injunction. However, if the intention is that the named sum should not be treated as the fixed price at which the defendant buys the right to do the act complained of, even if it is described in the contract as liquidated damages³, an injunction will, in a proper case, be granted to restrain the breach⁴. In cases of this description a party did not have both the injunction and damages, but elected which to have⁵. On an interim application to dissolve an injunction, the court will not determine whether the sum was inserted by way of a penalty or as the price at which a breach might be committed⁶.

451. Interim injunctions.

In exercising its jurisdiction by way of interim injunction, the court acts upon the principle of preventing irreparable injury¹. In a strong case where serious injury is likely to arise from the act complained of the court will interfere at the hearing to restrain the breach, but if the contract or covenant is obscure, or the breach doubtful, and no irreparable damage can arise to the claimant, then the question resolves itself into a question of comparative injury, whether the defendant will be more damnified by the injunction being granted or the claimant by its being withheld².

452. Threatened breach.

The court's jurisdiction is not limited to cases where the breach has actually been committed; it is enough if the defendant claims and insists on a right to do the act¹. B. EXPRESS NEGATIVE COVENANTS

453. Proof of damage unnecessary.

Where parties to an agreement contract, with their eyes open, that a particular thing is not to be done, proof of damage is generally not necessary in order to entitle the claimant to a perpetual injunction to restrain a breach¹. The principle applies² not only to a breach by the original covenantor, but also to a breach by an assignee with notice of the covenant³; but in cases where there is no privity of contract the court is probably bound to exercise its judicial discretion with regard to granting an injunction⁴. If the construction of the contract is clear and the breach is clear, the mere circumstance of the breach affords sufficient ground for the injunction⁵. In such a case the court has no discretion to exercise. All that it has to do is to say by way of injunction⁶ that the thing not be done. The injunction does nothing more than give the sanction of the process of the court to that which is already the contract between the parties. In effect it is the specific performance by the court of that negative bargain which the parties made with their eyes open⁷.

The fact that the breach has not occasioned the claimant any loss¹, or that the fact complained of has effected an improvement of his property², is no defence; nor does the fact that the breach has been committed in connection with a matter of great public importance³ or that compliance with the covenant would involve inconvenience to the public⁴, make any difference. The question of the balance of convenience does not arise if the claimant's case is made out and there is no arguable defence, and the court will not take the balance of convenience into consideration⁵ unless the circumstances of the case are very special⁶.

In a proper case the court will restrain the breach of covenants in leases, such as covenants not to carry on any business, trade or calling¹. The circumstance that the lessor has a right of entry for breach of covenant does not preclude him from applying for an injunction to restrain commission of the breach². In order that a reversioner may obtain an injunction to restrain the breach of restrictive covenants affecting the estate, he must bring his case within the legal principles applicable to damages and show that damage will be done to the reversion³.

Authors who have sold the copyright of works written by them may be restrained from republishing them in breach of covenant¹. In a proper case a husband² or a wife³ will be prevented by injunction from committing breaches of negative covenants contained in a separation deed. Defendants may also be restrained from ringing church bells at stated times contrary to covenant⁴, and a man who has agreed not to enter a judgment nor to publish it in any way may be restrained from advertising the judgment debt for sale, where the threat of sale is not made in good faith for the purposes of sale but only to obtain better terms⁵. Where an employee covenanted not to disclose information discovered in his employment and that covenant was expressed to apply both during and after his service, an injunction, with worldwide effect, was granted restraining publication by him of a book containing such information⁶.

The court has jurisdiction to restrain the breach of a contract not to apply to Parliament⁷.

The burden and benefit of covenants which are entered into between a lessor and a lessee and which touch or concern the land run with the reversion and the term at law¹. In the case of a covenant relating to land entered into between persons other than a lessor and lessee, such as a vendor and a purchaser, the benefit, but not the burden, may run with the land at law, but if the covenant is negative in substance the burden as well as the benefit will pass in equity, provided certain conditions are fulfilled, so as to render the covenant enforceable by persons other than the original covenantee against the covenantor's successors in title². Apart from statute, conditions cannot generally be imposed in contract for the sale of goods so as to bind persons who may purchase the goods from the original buyer and be enforceable against them by the original seller³.

Contract containing both positive and negative covenants.

C. EXPRESS COVENANTS, BOTH POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE

460. Contract containing both positive and negative covenants.

In the case of a contract containing both positive and negative covenants, the court in a proper case will restrain breaches of the negative covenants with a view to the complete performance of the contract¹. Relief will not be refused merely because there are other covenants by the claimant which may possibly be broken in the future². However, an injunction will not be granted with a view to specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease where, if the agreement were specifically performed, the lease could be determined by the re-entry clause which the lease would contain³. This jurisdiction will be exercised even where the positive covenants are of such a nature as to be incapable of forming the subject of a decree for specific performance⁴, such as in the case of a contract for personal services⁵, or for the sale of chattels⁶, provided the negative part of the contract is capable of being separated from the rest of the contract⁷ and, where the contract is one relating to personal services, is not unreasonable⁸. However, an interim injunction ought not to be granted where the contract is for personal services if the result would be to prevent the defendant from earning his livelihood⁹. In the case of a contract for personal services the negative stipulation must be expressed on the face of the contract, or at least be clearly and definitely implied by its language; it is not sufficient for this purpose to show that the act done is inconsistent with some positive stipulation in the contract¹⁰. An injunction will not be granted at the suit of the employer where he is himself the first to break the contract¹¹. Where the court grants an injunction, it repudiates the idea of indirectly compelling performance where it could not directly enforce it, but it gives all the relief in its power, without looking to the effect which may ultimately be produced by the restraint which it places on the party who is disposed to break his contract¹², although the effect may be to compel the specific performance of the contract¹³.

461. Apprenticeship.

In a contract of apprenticeship, the court will neither order specific performance¹ nor, during the currency of the apprenticeship, grant an injunction against committing a breach². 462. Limits of jurisdiction.

The principle by which the court restrains breaches of negative covenants, even where the contract contains positive covenants of which specific performance will not be ordered¹, has been criticised² and is not to be extended³. It is in any case essential that the negative stipulation which the court is asked to enforce is a stipulation requiring the contracting party not to do some particular act which the court can identify and so frame the injunction as to restrain him from doing it⁴. It seems that the right to an injunction in cases of this kind will not depend upon the use of a negative rather than a positive form of expression, and that if the substance of the contract is such that it ought not to be performed specifically an injunction will not be granted merely because the covenant is in a negative rather than a positive form; nor, on the other hand, will the injunction necessarily be refused merely because the agreement contains no negative stipulation⁵.

D. IMPLIED NEGATIVE COVENANTS

463. Implication of negative covenant.

Although where there is only an affirmative covenant the court will not enforce performance of the covenant affirmatively, it will, in special cases, intervene to prevent that being done which would be a departure from and a violation of the covenant¹. In such cases the court implies a negative covenant not to act inconsistently with the agreement, and restrains by injunction the breach of that implied undertaking. To found a claim for this relief it is necessary to point to something specific which a defendant has by implication agreed not to do². Each case in this class must be judged on its merits. There appears to be no rule of principle dividing the cases where, finding itself unable to decree specific performance, the court declines to grant an injunction restraining a breach of contract, from those in which an injunction is nonetheless granted³.

A contract to give a person the first refusal of property is deemed to involve a negative undertaking¹ not to part with the property to any other person without giving that first refusal², and a covenant to take the whole of the electric power required for his premises from the claimant implies a negative covenant not to take power from anyone else³.

A lessor who has covenanted with his lessee for quiet enjoyment will be restrained from acting in such a manner as to deprive his lessee of that benefit⁴, and a corporation which grants the exclusive right for a limited period to persons to sell certain goods on its premises will be restrained from evicting them⁵ or permitting the sale by other persons of similar goods⁶.

465. Examples where negative covenant not imported.

The court will often decline to imply a negative covenant into a contract containing an affirmative covenant and to interfere by way of injunction to restrain its breach¹. Examples are (1) where specific performance of the affirmative contract is impossible², such as in the case of a contract for personal service³ and in the case of some contracts for the sale and delivery of chattels which are not specifically enforceable⁴; (2) where the contract would require the court's constant supervision, which it has always declined to give⁵; (3) if the terms sought to be enforced are too vague, uncertain and indefinite to enable the court to carry them out⁶; or (4) where the terms are subsidiary to the whole contract and the contract as a whole is incapable of specific performance⁷. The court will not interfere when the contract, although negative in form, is affirmative in substance⁸. However, in a contract for personal services, the court may grant an injunction even though the contract does not contain a covenant which is absolutely and clearly negative in terms if it can extract from the contract a negative covenant which is sufficiently clear and definite to enable it to state exactly what the parties were agreeing that one of them should not do⁹.

A negative covenant will not be implied nor its breach be restrained where the contract on the claimant's part is of such a nature as to be incapable of specific performance and is wholly executory. In such a case an undertaking by the claimant specifically to perform his part is not sufficient¹⁰.

INJUNCTIONS/(4) INJUNCTIONS IN PARTICULAR CASES/ (iii) Protection of Contractual Rights/D. IMPLIED NEGATIVE COVENANTS/466. Contract conferring interest in property.

466. Contract conferring interest in property.

Where the owner of property has contracted that it is to be used or dealt with in a particular manner, the court may, in certain cases, restrain him from dealing with it in a manner inconsistent with the contract and thus indirectly enforce specific performance. Thus, if a charterparty is entered into in good faith between the owner of a vessel and the charterer, the charterer is entitled to an injunction to restrain the owner from employing the vessel in a manner inconsistent with the charterparty¹. The principle is applicable to property of any nature, whether land, a chattel or a chose (or thing) in action, but the contract must be such as to confer upon the claimant an actual interest in the property which requires protection².

E. EFFECT OF CLAIMANT'S CONDUCT

467. Claimant's conduct to be regarded.

The court takes into consideration the conduct of the party seeking the injunction. Relief will be refused if the claimant does not come to the court with clean hands¹; therefore, where one party to a contract containing mutual covenants fails to perform his part, the other party will not be restrained from committing a breach of a negative covenant on his part².

However, the fact that the claimant has committed trifling breaches of covenant³ or a trifling breach of another covenant which has caused no injury to anyone⁴, or a breach of a covenant which is altogether of minor importance⁵, will not preclude him from obtaining an injunction⁶. Even if he has been guilty of misconduct in not strictly and honourably performing his part of the agreement, an injunction may be granted where it is quite impossible in the circumstances of the case to estimate the damage to which he would be exposed if it were not granted⁷.

In Fechter v Montgomery (1863) 33 Beav 22, and Telegraph Despatch and Intelligence Co v McLean (1873) 3 Ch App 658, the negative covenants on the part of the defendant were implied. However, where under an agreement containing mutual grants the claimants have been put into possession of what was granted to them and have enjoyed it for several years, while the defendants have taken no steps to require the performance of the stipulation for their benefit but have allowed the time to expire within which it should have been performed, an injunction will be granted to restrain the defendants from disturbing the claimants' enjoyment: Great Northern Rly Co v Lancashire and Yorkshire Rly Co (1853) 1 Sm & G 81.

468. Effect of acquiescence and delay.

The claimant may lose his right to an injunction by acquiescence or delay¹, especially where a mandatory injunction is sought². Mere delay³ by a claimant in taking steps to prevent the continuance of a breach of a restrictive covenant will not amount to such acquiescence as to disentitle him to relief⁴, but if he delays bringing his action, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant is, to his knowledge⁵, expending money in the erection or alteration of buildings⁶, or if he acquiesces in the defendant's proceedings⁷, he will lose his right to an injunction. The right to enforce a covenant entered into between the vendor and purchaser of land may be lost by acquiescence in breaches of the covenant⁸. On similar principles a covenant in a lease may be presumed to have been released if the lessor is aware of a continuing breach and acquiesces in it for a long period⁹. Relief will not be granted where there has been for a considerable time a violation by both the claimant and the defendant of the agreement in respect of which relief is sought¹⁰, and by acquiescence a person may lose not only his right to an injunction but even his right to recover nominal damages¹¹.

F. INJUNCTION IN AID OF SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

469. Circumstances in which injunction granted.

Pending proceedings for specific performance, the court will grant an injunction to restrain a vendor from dealing with property if there is a clear and undisputed contract¹, but, if this is open to doubt, the question becomes one of comparative convenience and an injunction will be granted or refused according to the side to which the balance of convenience inclines². Where, on an agreement for the sale of a house at a fixed price and the fixtures and furniture at a valuation to be made by a named person, permission to enter the premises for the purpose of making the valuation is refused by the vendor, a mandatory injunction may be granted to compel him to allow the entry to enable the valuation to proceed³. Similarly, a mandatory injunction in aid of specific performance may be granted in a case where it is necessary for the preservation of the property sold, and what is necessary to be done can be done by the defendant at little inconvenience and small expense⁴. However, a purchaser will not be restrained on the vendor's application from purchasing an estate on the ground that he will be rendered unable to perform his contract with the vendor⁵.

An agreement by the holder of shares to exercise the votes conferred by them for a particular purpose or in accordance with the wishes of some other person may be enforced by mandatory injunction⁶.

A. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES OR TRUSTEES

470. Injunctions against personal representatives.

If there is danger of the property of a deceased person being lost owing to the insolvency¹ or bankruptcy² of an executor or administrator or to the fact that the executor or administrator is about to leave the country³, the court will grant an injunction restraining him from collecting and getting in the deceased's estate or from selling or disposing of it and receiving the proceeds of sale⁴. The mere fact that a personal representative is poor will not justify the court in interfering⁵, but an injunction will be granted if he is of bad character, drunken habits and great poverty⁶.

If undue influence is established, an executor claiming under a will and also by gift from the testator in his lifetime will, when the will and the gift are impeached, be restrained from selling⁷.

To induce the court to grant an injunction restraining an executor or administrator from parting with assets, without making provision for a future contingent liability, a case of past or probable future misapplication of the assets must be made out⁸, but where the liability is certain, although payable in the future, it must be provided for⁹.

An executor may be restrained at the suit of a co-executor from intermeddling in an estate and dealing with the property before probate¹⁰.

It seems that an injunction may be granted against personal representatives in respect of a continuance or repetition of a wrong committed by the deceased¹¹.

471. Injunctions against trustees.

The court will restrain a trustee¹ from using his powers under the trust otherwise than for the legitimate purposes of the trust². This jurisdiction is founded not upon the irremediable consequences which would result from the act complained of, but upon the breach of trust itself³. Trustees for charitable or religious purposes may also be restrained or granted relief by way of injunction, as the case may be⁴.

One of several beneficiaries may sue and obtain an injunction to restrain a breach of trust⁵. The smallness of his interest, the fact that he is a minor and that the proceedings may have been instituted with other motives are not reasons for depriving him of his remedy⁶. A trustee may and ought to apply for an injunction to restrain a breach of trust by a co-trustee⁷.

In an action to restrain a sale⁸ which is being conducted in such a manner as to constitute a breach of trust, an injunction may be granted restraining both the trustees and the purchaser from completing⁹. In a proper case trustees may be restrained from selling trust property if it can be shown that a sale would be detrimental to the beneficiaries' interests¹⁰.

If an injunction is granted against trustees, and new trustees are appointed and, with knowledge of the order, do what is forbidden by it, they may be committed for contempt¹¹.

Where sufficient grounds for relief are shown, the court may interfere in favour of a mortgagor to restrain an improper exercise by a mortgagee of his powers and remedies¹, but the court will rarely interfere to prevent a mortgagee from taking possession².

C. CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

475. Where injunction granted.

An injunction will be granted to restrain a person in a confidential position from disclosing information with which he became acquainted through that position¹. In such a case a fiduciary relationship must be established, but it cannot be implied from every form of contract². Thus a person may be restrained from making an improper use of, or from disclosing or communicating, information obtained by him in the course of his employment or of any other confidential relationship³.

Not only persons who have acquired the information direct, but others to whom they have communicated it, will be restrained in a proper case from making use of the information so acquired⁴. The use of evidence wrongfully obtained may also be restrained⁵.

An application to restrain the disclosure of confidential communications will be heard in private if a public hearing would defeat the object of an action brought by the claimant¹. (v) Protection of Property

A. INJUNCTIONS TO RESTRAIN DISPOSITION

477. Restraining improper transfers of stocks and shares.

An injunction¹, even without notice², may be granted to restrain a defendant from making an improper transfer of stock³ or shares⁴ or from improperly parting with bonds⁵. Where a transfer of stock is about to be made to the wrong person through mistake, an injunction will not be granted without notice to restrain the transfer unless the claimant swears that he believes the defendant will avail himself of the error, and will refuse to make a retransfer⁶. However, the Bank of England cannot prevent the executor of a testator possessed of stock in government funds from selling or transferring it. All that the bank has to do is to look to the legal title and not to the trusts of the will beyond it⁷. The court will not interfere with the bank's discretion as to the evidence it requires, exercised in good faith, so as to compel it to depart from its settled practice⁸.

1 The dealing with stocks, shares, securities and dividends may also be temporarily prevented by means of a stop notice or, when the stocks, shares or securities and dividends are in court, by means of a stop order: see PARA 339.

478. Negotiable instruments.

In a proper case an injunction¹ may be obtained to restrain the negotiation, indorsement, assignment, pledge or parting with negotiable instruments which have been illegally, fraudulently or improperly obtained², and if the instrument is liable to be completely avoided³ the court may also order it to be delivered up and cancelled⁴.

479. Restraining disposition of property.

An injunction¹ may be obtained in a proper case to restrain the sale², assignment³ or alienation⁴ of property notwithstanding that a principal party interested is out of the jurisdiction⁵. A person claimed, but not proved, to be an agent of a foreign government has been restrained from transmitting securities abroad which ought to be deposited in this country⁶, and a bank has been restrained from parting with a fund⁷, so as to protect the bank from any proceedings by an ambassador⁸. Where property has been directed to be sold by decree, the court will sometimes stay the sale pending an appeal, but, in such circumstances, if the property consists of personal chattels remaining in the possession of the appellant, he will be required to give ample security for their value⁹.

Where the thing which the defendant threatens to sell is a chattel, the court will interfere if it possesses a peculiar and intrinsic value, so that damages would not be an adequate remedy¹, but damages may be an adequate remedy where the claimant has put a value upon the property². Where a fiduciary relationship exists between the parties, the court may interfere whether or not the article possesses any such value³. A claimant wishing to prevent the disposition of goods must show a specific right in the property, and that they are in danger of being lost⁴.

An injunction will not be granted to restrain a defendant who is alleged to be a debtor from parting with his property⁵, unless there is a danger that the debtor may dispose of his assets so as to defeat judgment⁶.

485. Patent rights.

In an action to restrain the infringement of a patent¹, a perpetual injunction will be granted when the validity of the patent and the fact of the infringement are established², if there is a probability of the infringement being repeated or any intention to infringe is shown³. The grant of interim injunctions for infringement of patents⁴ is governed by the same principles as those in any other type of action⁵.

An interim injunction may be granted to the equitable assignee of a patent, but the legal owner must be a party before a perpetual injunction can be obtained⁶.

1 See PATENTS AND REGISTERED DESIGNS vol 79 (2008) PARAS 523, 538, 543-544; and the Patents Act 1977 s 61. In urgent cases an interim injunction may be obtained without notice: British Thomson-Houston Co Ltd v P Henry & Co Ltd (1928) 45 RPC 218, CA.

486. Threats of action.

Where any person, whether or not entitled to or interested in a patent, or an application for one, by circulars, advertisements or otherwise threatens any other person with proceedings for infringement of a patent, the other person may obtain an injunction against the continuance of the threats¹ unless the person making the threats proves that the acts in respect of which proceedings were threatened constitute, or, if done, would constitute, an infringement of a patent or of rights arising from the publication of a complete specification in respect of a claim of the specification not shown by the claimant to be invalid².

Where a person (whether or not the proprietor of, or entitled to any right in, a patent) by circulars, advertisements or otherwise threatens another person with proceedings for any infringement of a patent, a person aggrieved by the threats (whether or not he is the person to whom the threats are made) may, subject to exceptions, bring proceedings in the court against the person making the threats, claiming, inter alia, an injunction against the continuance of the threats³.

The court's jurisdiction in the protection given to trade marks rests upon property, and the court interferes by injunction because that is the only mode by which property of this kind can be effectually protected¹. The court acts upon the same principles in granting relief by way of injunction in the case of the infringement of the right to a trade mark as in the case of the violation of any other right of property².

It is also a fundamental rule that no man has a right to pass off his goods for sale as the goods of a rival trader³.

An action for threats⁴ does not lie in relation to trade marks as it does in relation to patents⁵.

C. INJUNCTIONS TO PROTECT PARTICULAR PROPERTY RIGHTS

488. Letters.

An injunction may be obtained to restrain the opening of letters not addressed to the defendant¹. The court will also interfere to prevent a defendant, by reason of his having been employed in the claimants' business, from obtaining letters which, although addressed to him by name, really belong to the claimants. When such letters come to his private address, under a notice given by him to the Post Office, a mandatory injunction may be granted compelling the defendant to withdraw his notice to the Post Office².

Where water is diverted from a known and defined channel for a non-riparian or extraordinary purpose in such a manner that it is not returned substantially undiminished in quantity or unaltered in character, then, without proof of actual damage, a riparian owner may obtain an injunction to restrain the diversion¹.

An injunction may be obtained to restrain building on a disused burial ground² or the use of land as burial ground³.

In a proper case an injunction may be granted to restrain a defendant from disturbing the claimant in his possession or occupation of a house⁴.

490. Use of name.

An injunction may be granted to restrain the use of a name in connection with a trade or business¹ or the use of a designation implying membership of a professional association², but not to restrain the use of a patronymic name of a family³. In the absence of fraud or malice, a defendant will not be restrained from calling his house by the name of the claimant's house⁴.

However, a person may be restrained from the unauthorised use of another person's name when such use amounts to a pledge of the other's credit or is otherwise calculated to subject him to a probability of risk or liability, such as when a person holds another out as his partner⁵ or to be connected with him in business⁶ in such circumstances that the other might be exposed to litigation and possibly held liable on the ground of acquiescing in the use of his name, or might be injured in his business and reputation by the connection of his name with that person's⁷.

(vi) Protection of Public Rights and Administration of Justice

491. Proceedings by the Attorney General.

Where an illegal act which affects the public is committed or threatened, the court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction at the suit of the Attorney General¹. The decision whether or not the Attorney General should sue is a matter for him², and the courts have no power either to question his right to sue, as distinct from his right to relief, or his right to refuse to do so³. However, the court has a discretion here as in other cases of injunction and the Attorney General is not entitled to an injunction as of right on proving his case⁴. Where there has been a clear and deliberate breach of a duty imposed by statute, an injunction will follow as a matter of course⁵, except where the injunction would place a public body in serious difficulty⁶, in which case the court may allow the defendant a reasonable time to comply with the law⁷.

492. Circumstances in which injunction granted.

The Attorney General may take proceedings to abate any public nuisance¹, or to restrain individuals or corporations from contravening or exceeding powers conferred upon them by statute or charter², but the jurisdiction is not confined to such cases, and whenever public rights are infringed the court will come to the assistance of the Attorney General, as a public authority, to give the ancillary remedy which is necessary to enforce the public rights³, whether or not the infringement involves an invasion of any rights of property⁴. The public is concerned to see that Acts of Parliament are obeyed⁵, and the Attorney General represents the public as a whole in insisting that the law be observed⁶. The court therefore has jurisdiction to grant an injunction at the suit of the Attorney General in any case where there has been a breach of statutory duty, or where a statutory offence has been committed, for which no other remedy is adequate⁷. Where the Attorney General is suing for the purpose of enforcing a public right, the court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction, even though the right was conferred by a statute which prescribed remedies for its enforcement⁸. In exercising its discretion whether to grant an injunction in such a case, the court should have regard to the existence of other remedies open to the Attorney General or the relator, but if a clear breach of the public right is established, the court should be very slow to say that the Attorney General ought to have exhausted other remedies before coming to the court or to interfere with his decision to apply for an injunction⁹. Although a prosecution cannot be brought, an action may nevertheless lie at the suit of the Attorney General¹⁰.

495. Special tribunals.

Where Parliament has constituted a tribunal for a special purpose, the court may not restrain persons who are entitled to do so from applying to it¹, but it seems that the court might interfere if a case of fraud could be made out². The control of the court over special tribunals is discussed elsewhere in this work³. Where Parliament has pointed out a mode of procedure in a particular case, such as by proceedings before a magistrates' court, another court will not usually restrain such proceedings by injunction⁴.

497. Criminal proceedings.

A court of equity generally has no jurisdiction to restrain criminal proceedings for the recovery of a penalty imposed by Act of Parliament for breach of its enactments¹, nor will the claimant in pending proceedings be restrained from instituting or continuing criminal proceedings against the defendant unless the criminal proceedings are of the same nature as the civil proceedings².

499. Court's interference on equitable grounds.

The court has jurisdiction to interfere in arbitration proceedings on equitable grounds where the parties have by their conduct excluded themselves from the benefit of their contract to arbitrate¹. In order to justify the court in saying that an arbitrator named in a contract is disqualified from acting on the ground of bias, it is not, as in the case of judges and other persons in a judicial capacity, sufficient to show that he might be suspected of bias, but circumstances must be shown to exist which establish at least a probability that he will in fact be biased².

With regard to foreign proceedings, the court will restrain a person within its jurisdiction from instituting or prosecuting proceedings in a foreign court whenever the circumstances of the case make such an interposition necessary or expedient¹. In a proper case the court in this country may restrain a person who has actually recovered judgment in a foreign court from proceeding to enforce that judgment². The jurisdiction is discretionary³ and the court will give credit to foreign courts for doing justice in their own jurisdiction⁴.

The English courts have no jurisdiction to restrain a foreigner, resident abroad, from suing for his debt in the courts of his own country, even after an order for administration of the debtor's estate has been made in this country¹. 13. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL

(1) INTRODUCTION

503. The disposal of proceedings without a trial.

The disposal of proceedings without a trial is one of the court's duties in furthering the overriding objective of dealing with cases justly¹. This includes saving expense², dealing with the case in ways which are proportionate³ and ensuring that it is dealt with expeditiously and fairly⁴. The court is also required to further the overriding objective by actively managing cases and in particular, amongst other case management functions, by identifying issues at an early stage⁵ and deciding promptly which issues need full investigation and trial and accordingly disposing summarily of the others⁶.

In order to achieve these ends the Civil Procedure Rules provide that:

- 531 (1) the court may strike out a statement of case or part of a statement of case which discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the claim or which is an abuse of the court's process⁷;
- 532 (2) the court may give summary judgment against a claimant or a defendant if the court considers that the claim or defence (as to its entirety or an issue within it) has no real prospect of succeeding and there is no other compelling reason why the case or issue should be disposed of at trial⁸.

These provisions are closely interlinked and applications for orders striking out statements of case and for summary judgment may be made and heard at the same time⁹.

The court may also make these orders on its own initiative¹⁰.

6 See CPR 1.4(2)(c); and PARAS 35, 246.

7 See CPR 3.4(2); and PARAS 252, 520. Such an order would also be in accordance with the requirement to allot to a case an appropriate share of the court's resources while taking into account the need to allot resources to other cases: see CPR 1.1(2)(e); and PARA 33. Difference between the procedure for striking out a statement of case and the procedure of summary judgment.

504. Difference between the procedure for striking out a statement of case and the procedure of summary judgment.

The court¹ has power to strike out² a statement of case (or part of a statement of case) which discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the claim³. This is an example of active case management, in ensuring the summary disposal of issues which do not need full investigation at trial⁴. Striking out the statement of case means that no court time is wasted, even in pre-trial processes. It is a decision on the merits, and not a sanction for non-compliance with a procedural requirement imposed by an order⁵. On an application for summary judgment⁶, the court may give judgment without trial where it considers that there is no real prospect of success on the part of either the claimant or the defendant. This may involve the court in treating the facts averred as true, even if it thinks that they may be difficult to prove⁷. In applications for striking out, the court is mainly concerned with the adequacy of the statements of case, with whether they disclose reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the action⁸, while in considering whether to give summary judgment the court may look beyond the statement of case and consider the evidence⁹.

The two procedures do have similarities¹⁰. A party may apply for a striking-out order and in the alternative for summary judgment¹¹ and in appropriate cases the court may treat an application to strike out as an application for summary judgment¹². There are differences, though, in that the summary judgment procedure, unlike the striking out procedure, also applies to the summary disposal of issues, including preliminary issues; the striking out procedure applies to all proceedings, including proceedings excluded from the summary judgment procedure; and there are additional procedural requirements relating to the summary judgment procedure¹³.

is an important part of the case management function to bring proceedings to an end as expeditiously as possible. (2) SETTLEMENT OR COMPROMISE OF PROCEEDINGS

505. Settlement or compromise of proceedings; in general.

Encouraging and facilitating the settlement or compromise of proceedings without a trial is one of the court's duties in furthering the overriding objective of dealing with cases justly¹. In order to do so, in actively managing cases, the court is required to:

- 533 (1) encourage the parties to co-operate with each other in the conduct of proceedings²;
- 534 (2) encourage the parties to use an alternative dispute resolution procedure if the court thinks that appropriate and facilitate the use of such procedure³; and
- 535 (3) help the parties to settle the whole or part of a case⁴.

The court may stay⁵ the proceedings for attempts at settlement by alternative dispute resolution or other means where the parties request it or, where the court considers it appropriate, the claim may be stayed on the court's own initiative⁶.

The parties are also required to exchange information and documents before the commencement of proceedings, thus enabling them to avoid litigation by agreeing a settlement or compromise of the claim⁷. These requirements are given effect by the court taking into account whether the parties have complied with them:

- 536 (a) when giving directions as to the conduct of the proceedings⁸;
- 537 (b) in deciding whether to impose a condition that a party pay a sum of money into court⁹;
- 538 (c) in deciding whether to strike out a statement of case¹⁰;
- 539 (d) in deciding whether to grant a party relief from a sanction imposed as a result of failure to comply with a rule, practice direction or order of the court¹¹;
- 540 (e) in deciding what order (if any) to make as to the costs payable by one party to another¹².

The provisions under Part 36 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹³ relating to Part 36 offers¹⁴ are also intended to encourage the parties to settle or compromise proceedings by making reasonable offers both before¹⁵ and after the commencement of proceedings¹⁶. Failure to accept a Part 36 offer which is not bettered at a trial may result in orders for costs more adverse than otherwise might have been made¹⁷.

1 As to the overriding objective see CPR 1.1(1); and PARA 33.

(3) DEFAULT JUDGMENT

(i) Obtaining Default Judgments

506. Default judgment; in general.

In the Civil Procedure Rules, 'default judgment' means judgment without trial where a defendant¹ has failed to file an acknowledgment of service² or has failed to file a defence³.

A claimant⁴ may not obtain a default judgment:

- 541 (1) on a claim for delivery of goods subject to an agreement regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974⁵;
- 542 (2) where he uses the alternative procedure for claims under Part 8 of the Civil Procedure Rules⁶; or
- 543 (3) in any other case where a practice direction provides that the claimant may not obtain default judgment⁷.

507. Conditions to be satisfied for obtaining a default judgment.

The claimant¹ may obtain judgment in default of an acknowledgment of service² only if the defendant³ has not filed⁴ an acknowledgment of service or a defence to the claim or any part of the claim⁵ and the relevant time for doing so has expired⁶. Judgment in default of defence may be obtained only where an acknowledgment of service has been filed but a defence has not been filed and, in a counterclaim⁷, where a defence has not been filed, and, in either case, the relevant time limit for doing so has expired⁸. The claimant may not, however, obtain a default judgment if:

- 544 (1) the defendant has applied to have the claimant's statement of case struck out⁹ or for summary judgment¹⁰ and, in either case, that application has not been disposed of¹¹;
- 545 (2) the defendant has satisfied the whole claim (including any claim for costs) on which the claimant is seeking judgment¹²; or
- 546 (3) the claimant is seeking judgment on a claim for money¹³ and the defendant has filed or served¹⁴ on the claimant an admission¹⁵ together with a request for time to pay¹⁶.

Where the claim form is served by the claimant, he may not obtain default judgment unless he has filed a certificate of service¹⁷. Furthermore, under the service regulation regarding service in the member states of judicial and extrajudicial documents in civil or commercial matters¹⁸, judgment in default may not be given without proof of service¹⁹.

1 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

2 In order to obtain a default judgment the claimant must either file a request which is dealt with administratively by a court officer, who enters judgment (see CPR 12.4(1); and PARA 508) or, when the prescribed conditions are met but the default judgment sought is not one prescribed by CPR 12.4(1)(a), (b), (c) or (d), by issuing and serving an application notice in accordance with CPR Pt 23 seeking an order for default judgment, which is dealt with judicially with or without a hearing (see CPR 12.10; and PARA 514). 508. Procedure for obtaining default judgment.

A default judgment may be obtained by request or by application: judgment by request is entered by means of an administrative act without any judicial involvement; judgment by application involves some judicial consideration.

Thus a claimant¹ may obtain a default judgment² by filing a request in the relevant practice form³ where the claim is for:

- 547 (1) a specified amount of money⁴;
- 548 (2) an amount of money to be decided by the court⁵;
- 549 (3) delivery of goods where the claim form gives the defendant⁶ the alternative of paying their value⁷; or
- 550 (4) any combination of these remedies⁸.

The claimant must, however, make an application in accordance with the general rules about applications for court orders⁹ if he wishes to obtain a default judgment on a claim which consists of or includes a claim for any other remedy¹⁰ or where certain specified rules relating to default judgments for costs only¹¹ or for default judgments which must be made by application¹² so provide¹³.

Where a claimant claims any other remedy in his claim form in addition to those specified in heads (1) to (4) above, but abandons that claim in his request for judgment, he may still obtain a default judgment by filing a request under these provisions¹⁴.

In civil proceedings against the Crown¹⁵, a request for a default judgment must be considered by a master or district judge, who must in particular be satisfied that the claim form and particulars of claim have been properly served¹⁶ on the Crown¹⁷.

1 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

2 The procedure for obtaining a default judgment by filing a request (see the text and notes 3-8) which is dealt with administratively by a court officer who enters judgment, is to be contrasted with the procedure to be followed when the conditions prescribed in CPR 12.3 (see PARA 507) are met, but where the default judgment sought is not one set out in heads (1)-(4) in the text, in which case the claimant must issue and serve an application notice under CPR Pt 23 (see PARA 303 et seq) seeking an order for default judgment, which is dealt with judicially with or without a hearing: see further the text and notes 9-13; and PARAS 513-514. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL/ (3) DEFAULT JUDGMENT/(i) Obtaining Default Judgments/509. Nature of judgment where default judgment obtained by filing a request.

509. Nature of judgment where default judgment obtained by filing a request.

Where the claim is for a specified sum of money, the claimant¹ may specify in a request for default judgment² the date by which the whole of the judgment debt is to be paid³ or the times and rate at which it is to be paid by instalments⁴. Except where the claim is for delivery of goods and the claim form gives the defendant⁵ the alternative of paying their value, a default judgment on a claim for a specified amount of money obtained on the filing of a request will be judgment for the amount of the claim, less any payments made, and costs to be paid by the date or at the rate specified in the request for judgment⁶ or, if none is specified, immediately⁷. Where, however, the claim is for delivery of goods and the claim form gives the defendant that alternative, a default judgment obtained on the filing of a request will be judgment requiring the defendant to deliver the goods or, if he does not do so, to pay the value of the goods as decided by the court⁸ less any payments made and to pay costs⁹.

Where the claim is for an unspecified amount of money, a default judgment obtained on the filing of a request will be for an amount to be decided by the court and costs¹⁰.

510. Interest.

A default judgment¹ on a claim for a specified amount of money obtained on the filing of a request² may include the amount of interest claimed to the date of judgment if:

- 551 (1) the particulars of claim include the requisite details³;
- 552 (2) where interest is claimed under the general statutory power of the High Court or of a county court to award interest on debts and damages⁴, the rate is no higher than the rate of interest payable on judgment debts at the date when the claim form was issued⁵; and
- 553 (3) the claimant's⁶ request for judgment includes a calculation of the interest claimed for the period from the date up to which interest was stated to be calculated in the claim form to the date of the request for judgment⁷.

In any case where the above provisions do not apply, judgment will be for an amount of interest to be decided by the court⁸.

511. Procedure for deciding an amount or value.

Where the claimant¹ obtains a default judgment² on the filing of a request³ and judgment is for an amount of money to be decided by the court⁴, the value of goods to be decided by the court⁵ or an amount of interest to be decided by the court⁶, and the court enters judgment, it will give any directions it considers appropriate⁷ and, if it considers it appropriate, allocate the case⁸.

On the entry of the judgment the court will list a disposal hearing: paras 12.2(1), 12.4. Where judgment has been entered with damages to be assessed, the defendant can raise any point which goes to the quantification of damages at the subsequent assessment of damages hearing, provided it is not inconsistent with any issue raised by the judgment. The default judgment is only conclusive as to the liability of the defendants as pleaded in the statement of claim: Lunnun v Singh [1999] All ER (D) 718, [1999] CPLR 587, CA.

Where a case is allocated to the multi-track under CPR 12.7, appeal from the final decision lies to the Court of Appeal: see the Access to Justice Act 1999 (Destination of Appeals) Order 2000, SI 2000/1071, art 4 (amended by SI 2003/490). Contrast cases deemed to be allocated to that track under CPR 8.9(c): see PARA 127 note 13. As to appeals see PARA 1657 et seq. The court will not normally allocate the proceedings to a track (other than the small claims track), unless it appears that the amount payable is genuinely disputed on substantial grounds or the dispute is not suitable to be dealt with at a disposal hearing: see Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.3(2). If the court does not allocate the assessment to a track the court will direct that a disposal hearing be listed: see paras 12.2(1), 12.4; and note 7. At a disposal hearing the court may give directions or decide the amount payable: para 12.4(2). If the financial value of the claim is such that the claim would, if defended, be allocated to the small claims track, the court will normally allocate it to that track and may treat the disposal hearing as a final hearing in accordance with CPR Pt 27 (see PARA 274 et seq): Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.4(3). If the court does not allocate the claim to the small claims track, it may decide the amount payable under or in consequence of the relevant order and give judgment for that amount, or give directions as to the future conduct of the proceedings: para 12.4(2). It will not, however, exercise the power to give judgment (except where the claim has been allocated to the small claims track), unless any written evidence on which the claimant relies has been served on the defendant at least three days before the disposal hearing: para 12.4(5). CPR 32.6 (see PARA 751) applies to evidence at a disposal hearing unless the court otherwise directs: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 12.4(4).

512. Claim against more than one defendant.

A claimant¹ may obtain a default judgment² on request³ on a claim for money or a claim for delivery of goods against one of two or more defendants⁴, and proceed with his claim against the other defendants⁵. Where a claimant applies for a default judgment against one of two or more defendants, then if the claim can be dealt with separately from the claim against the other defendants the court⁶ may enter a default judgment against that defendant⁷ and the claimant may continue the proceedings against the other defendants⁸. If, however, the claim cannot be dealt with separately from the claim against the other defendants, the court will not enter default judgment against that defendant⁹ and must deal with the application at the same time as it disposes of the claim against the other defendants¹⁰.

A claimant may not enforce against one of two or more defendants any default judgment¹¹ for possession of land or for delivery of goods unless he has obtained a judgment for possession or delivery¹² against all the defendants to the claim¹³ or the court gives permission¹⁴.

513. Procedure for obtaining a default judgment for costs only.

Where a claimant¹ wishes to obtain a default judgment² for costs only, then if the claim is for fixed costs³, he may obtain it by filing a request in the relevant practice form⁴. If the claim is for any other type of costs, he must make an application in accordance with the general rules⁵ about applications for court orders⁶. Where such an application is made, judgment will be for an amount to be decided by the court⁷.

514. Default judgment obtained by making an application.

The claimant¹ must make an application in accordance with the general rules about applications for court orders² in order to obtain default judgment³ where the claim is a claim against a child⁴ or protected party⁵, or a claim in tort by one spouse or civil partner against the other⁶. He must also make such application where the defendant⁷ has failed to file an acknowledgment of service⁸ if he wishes to obtain a default judgment:

- 554 (1) against a defendant who has been served with the claim out of the jurisdiction⁹ without the permission of the court¹⁰;
- 555 (2) against a defendant domiciled¹¹ in Scotland or Northern Ireland or in any other Convention territory or member state¹²;
- 556 (3) against a state¹³;
- 557 (4) against a diplomatic agent¹⁴ who enjoys immunity from civil jurisdiction by virtue of the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964¹⁵; or
- 558 (5) against persons or organisations who enjoy immunity from civil jurisdiction pursuant to the provisions of the International Organisations Acts 1968 and 1981¹⁶.

In addition to these specific cases, the claimant must make an application¹⁷ for default judgment on a claim which consists of or includes a claim for any remedy in respect of which default judgment by filing a request¹⁸ is not available¹⁹; thus, for example, he must make such application where the claim is for delivery up of goods and the defendant will not be allowed the alternative of paying their value²⁰.

Where the claimant makes an application for a default judgment, judgment will be such judgment as it appears to the court that the claimant is entitled to on his statement of case²¹.

However, neither the application notice nor any evidence relied on need be served upon a defendant who has failed to file an acknowledgment of service, unless notice needs to be given under any other provision of the Civil Procedure Rules: see CPR 12.11(2), (4)(b), (c). As to the requirements for evidence in such applications see Practice Direction--Default Judgment PD 12 para 4, in particular, para 4.1(1) which provides that a certificate of service (see Form N215 in The Civil Court Practice) will be sufficient evidence of service where the claimant has served the claim form himself. 5 CPR 12.10(a)(i). On an application against a child or protected party, a litigation friend to act on behalf of the child or protected party must be appointed by the court before judgment can be obtained, and the claimant must satisfy the court by evidence that he is entitled to the judgment claimed: Practice Direction--Default Judgment PD 12 para 4.2; and see CPR 12.11(3), cited in note 6. As to the meaning of 'protected party' see PARA 222 note 1; and as to litigation friends see PARA 222.

An application for a default judgment may be made without notice if a claim was served in accordance with the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 or the judgments regulation, unless notice is required under any other provision of the Civil Procedure Rules: see CPR 12.11(4)(a), (c). As to the judgments regulation see CPR 12.11(6)(e); and PARA 169 note 12.

10 CPR 12.10(b)(i). On such an application, or on an application within head (2) in the text, where the defendant has not acknowledged service the evidence must establish that the claim is one that the court has power to hear and decide, that no other court has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and decide the claim, and that the claim has been properly served: see Practice Direction--Default Judgment PD 12 para 4.3. Evidence in support of such an application must be by affidavit: para 4.5. As to the meaning of 'affidavit' see PARA 540 note 5. As to proof of service in another member state see also PARA 167.

11 For these purposes, 'domicile' is to be determined, in relation to a Convention territory, in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 ss 41-46 (see CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 84 et seq); and in relation to a member state, in accordance with the judgments regulation and the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Order 2001, SI 2001/3929, Sch 1 paras 9-12: CPR 12.11(6)(a). For these purposes, 'Convention territory' means the territory or territories of any contracting state, as defined by the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 1(3) (see CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 65), to which the Brussels Conventions or Lugano Convention apply: CPR 12.11(6)(b).

Where an application is made against a state for a default judgment where the defendant has failed to file an acknowledgment of service, the application may be made without notice, but the court hearing the application may direct that a copy of the application notice be served on the state: CPR 12.11(5)(a). If the court either grants the application or directs that a copy of the application notice be served on the state, the judgment or application notice (and the evidence in support) may be served out of the jurisdiction without any further order and the procedure for serving the judgment or the application notice is the same as for serving a claim form under CPR Pt 6 Section III (service out of the jurisdiction: see PARA 168 et seq) except where an alternative method of service has been agreed under the State Immunity Act 1978 s 12(6) (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 256): CPR 12.11(5)(b), (c). On an application against a state the evidence must (1) set out the grounds of the application; (2) establish the facts proving that the state is excepted from the immunity conferred by the State Immunity Act 1978 s 1; (3) establish that the claim was sent through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the state (unless the state agreed to a different form of service); and (4) establish that the time for acknowledging service, which is extended to two months by s 12(2) of that Act, has expired: Practice Direction--Default Judgment PD 12 para 4.4. Evidence in support of such an application must be by affidavit: para 4.5. As to when default judgment against a state takes effect see CPR 40.10; and PARA 1142.

14 For these purposes, 'diplomatic agent' has the meaning given by the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 s 1, Sch 1 art 1(e) (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 273 note 1): CPR 12.11(6)(d).

515. Special provisions relating to default judgment on certain additional claims.

Except in the case of a counterclaim¹ or a claim by a defendant² for contribution³ or indemnity⁴ against another defendant⁵, if the party against whom an additional claim⁶ is made fails to file⁷ an acknowledgment of service or defence in respect of that claim, then the party against whom the additional claim is made is deemed to admit that claim, and is bound by any judgment or decision in the main proceedings in so far as it is relevant to any matter arising in the additional claim⁸. If default judgment is given⁹ against the additional claimant, that claimant may obtain judgment in respect of the additional claim by filing a request in the relevant practice form¹⁰. An additional claimant may not, however, enter judgment under this provision without the court's permission if he has not satisfied the default judgment which has been given against him¹¹ or if he wishes to obtain judgment for any remedy other than a contribution or indemnity¹². An application for such permission may be made without notice unless the court directs otherwise¹³.

DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL/ (3) DEFAULT JUDGMENT/(ii) Setting Aside or Varying Default Judgments/516. Setting aside or varying a default judgment as of right.

(ii) Setting Aside or Varying Default Judgments

516. Setting aside or varying a default judgment as of right.

The rules in Part 13 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ set out the procedure for setting aside² or varying judgment entered under Part 12 of the rules³.

The court⁴ must set aside a judgment entered under Part 12 if judgment was wrongly entered because:

- 559 (1) in the case of a judgment in default of acknowledgment of service⁵, the conditions upon which a default judgment is obtainable relating to the filing of an acknowledgment of service or defence⁶ were not satisfied, or the defendant has applied for an order striking out the claim or for summary judgment and that application has not been disposed of⁷, or the claimant is seeking judgment on a money claim and the defendant has filed or served an admission⁸ together with a request to pay⁹;
- 560 (2) in the case of a judgment in default of a defence¹⁰, the conditions upon which a default judgment is obtainable relating to the filing of a defence were not satisfied¹¹ or the other circumstances set out in head (1) above apply¹²; or
- 561 (3) the whole of the claim was satisfied before judgment was entered¹³.

These are the only grounds on which a default judgment must be set aside as of right; the fact that the defendant did not know of the claim because he had not received the claim form does not, on its own, entitle the defendant to have the default judgment set aside¹⁴.

DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL/ (3) DEFAULT JUDGMENT/(ii) Setting Aside or Varying Default Judgments/517. Discretionary setting aside or varying of a default judgment.

517. Discretionary setting aside or varying of a default judgment.

In a case where the court¹ is not required to set aside² a default judgment entered under Part 12 of the Civil Procedure Rules³, the court has a discretion to set aside or vary such a judgment if the defendant has a real prospect of successfully defending the claim⁴ or it appears to the court that there is some other good reason why the judgment should be set aside or varied⁵ or the defendant should be allowed to defend the claim⁶. An application under this provision must be supported by evidence⁷. In considering whether to set aside or vary a judgment so entered, the matters to which the court must have regard include whether the person seeking to set aside the judgment made an application to do so promptly⁸.

When making an order setting aside or varying a default judgment, the court may attach conditions, including a condition that the defendant pay a sum of money into court⁹.

When a claim form or an equivalent document has had to be transmitted to another member state for the purpose of service, under the provisions of the service regulation¹⁰, and a default judgment has been entered against a defendant who has not appeared, the judge has the power to relieve the defendant from the effects of the expiration of the time for appeal from the judgment if certain conditions are fulfilled¹¹. An application for relief may be filed only within a reasonable time after the defendant has knowledge of the default judgment¹².

(4) STRIKING OUT A CLAIM OR DEFENCE

520. Power to strike out a statement of case.

The court¹ may strike out² a statement of case³ if it appears to the court:

- 566 (1) that the statement of case discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending the claim⁴;
- 567 (2) that the statement of case is an abuse of the court's process or is otherwise likely to obstruct the just disposal of the proceedings⁵; or
- 568 (3) that there has been a failure to comply with a rule, practice direction or court order⁶.

This provision does not limit any other power of the court to strike out a statement of case⁷.

Where a court officer⁸ is asked to issue a claim form which he believes may fall within head (1) or head (2) above, he should issue it, but may then consult a judge⁹ who may, on his own initiative, make an immediate order designed to ensure that the claim is disposed of or that it proceeds in accordance with the Civil Procedure Rules¹⁰. The judge may allow the claimant¹¹ a hearing before deciding whether to make such an order¹². The fact that a judge allows a claim referred to him by a court officer to proceed does not prejudice the right of any party to apply for any order against the claimant¹³.

A court officer may similarly consult a judge about any document filed which purports to be a defence and which he believes may fall within head (1) or head (2) above¹⁴. If the judge decides that the document falls within either of those heads, he may on his own initiative make an order striking it out and where he does so he may extend the time for the defendant to file a proper defence¹⁵. He may allow the defendant a hearing before deciding whether to make such an order¹⁶. Alternatively, the judge may make an order¹⁷ requiring the defendant within a stated time to clarify his defence or to give additional information about it and the order may provide that the defence will be struck out if the defendant does not comply¹⁸. The fact that a judge does not strike out a defence on his own initiative does not prejudice the right of the claimant to apply for any order against the defendant¹⁹.

When the court strikes out a statement of case it may make any consequential order it considers appropriate²⁰.

Where the court has struck out a claimant's statement of case and the claimant has been ordered to pay costs to the defendant, then if, before the claimant pays those costs, he starts another claim against the same defendant, arising out of facts which are the same or substantially the same as those relating to the claim in which the statement of case was struck out, the court may, on the application of the defendant, stay that other claim until the costs of the first claim have been paid²¹.

Where a judge at a hearing strikes out all or part of a party's statement of case he may enter such judgment for the other party as that party appears entitled to²².

A party may believe he can show without a trial that an opponent's case has no real prospect of success on the facts, or that the case is bound to succeed or fail, as the case may be, because of a point of law, including the construction of a document. In such a case the party concerned may make an application²³ under the above provisions or an application for summary judgment²⁴, or both, as he thinks appropriate²⁵.

The court may strike out part only of a statement of case in order to limit the issues which are to be litigated between the parties²⁶.

If the court strikes out a claimant's statement of case and it considers that the claim is totally without merit, the court's order must record that fact and the court must at the same time consider whether it is appropriate to make a civil restraint order²⁷.

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 As to the meaning of 'striking out' see PARA 218 note 2.

3 For these purposes and the purposes of CPR 3.5 (see PARA 521), reference to a statement of case includes reference to part of a statement of case: CPR 3.4(1). As to the meaning of 'statement of case' see PARA 584. The power to strike out a statement of case under CPR 3.4 (see the text and notes 4-25) is an example of the court's active case management function to dispose summarily of issues which do not require full investigation at trial (see CPR 1.4(2)(c); and PARA 246): Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 1.1. The practice direction draws a parallel between this power and that under CPR 24.2 (see PARA 524) to give summary judgment: see Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 1.2. Whilst a party may apply for an order under these provisions, the court may also exercise these powers on its own initiative at any time (see CPR 3.3, in particular CPR 3.3(3), (5) as to notices to be given to parties when the court proposes to make or makes such an order; and PARA 251): Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 4.1. See also Sinclair v Chief Constable of West Yorkshire [2000] All ER (D) 2240, CA.

Where the court proposes to make such an order of its own initiative, it will not allocate the claim to a track but instead it will either (1) fix a hearing, giving the parties at least 14 days' notice of the date of the hearing and of the issues which it is proposed that the court will decide; or (2) make an order directing a party to take the steps described in the order within a stated time and specifying the consequence of not taking those steps: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 5.4(1), (2). Where the court decides at the hearing of an application or a hearing fixed under para 5.4(2)(a) (see head (1)) that the claim (or part of the claim) is to continue it may treat that hearing as an allocation hearing, allocate the claim and give case management directions, or give other directions: para 5.5.

4 CPR 3.4(2)(a). Examples of claims which may be struck out under this rule include claims which set out no facts indicating what the claim is about, those which are incoherent and make no sense and those which contain a coherent set of facts but those facts, even if true, do not disclose any legally recognisable claim against the defendant: see Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 1.4. Examples of defences which may be struck out under this rule include those which consist of a bare denial or otherwise set out no coherent statement of facts (and thus do not comply with CPR 16.5: see PARA 599) or which set out facts, which, although coherent, would not, even if true, amount in law to a defence to the claim: see Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 1.6. For an example of an application which was refused see Turner v Copeland [2000] All ER (D) 1439. See also Walsh v Staines [2008] EWCA Civ 1324, [2008] All ER (D) 34 (Dec).

5 CPR 3.4(2)(b). A claim may fall within this rule if it is vexatious, scurrilous or obviously ill-founded: Practice Direction--Striking out a Statement of Case PD 3A para 1.5. As to vexatious litigants see para 7.1; and PARA 258. As to striking out under CPR 3.4(2)(b) see eg Felix v Department of Social Security [2001] All ER (D) 85 (Jan) (when drafting a compromise settlement agreement in respect of employment rights it is beneficial specifically to spell out whether it is intended to encompass personal injury claims so as to avoid future litigation); Carter Commercial Developments Ltd v Bedford Borough Council [2001] All ER (D) 388 (Jul), [2001] 34 EG 99 (CS); Harris v Bolt Burdon [2000] CPLR 9, CA. 6 CPR 3.4(2)(c); and see CPR 3.5; and PARA 521. It is the policy of CPR 3.4 that a claimant who is guilty of delay, and is in breach of an order of the court, is in default at his own peril if the issues in his case, for whatever reason, cannot still be tried fairly; where a fair trial cannot take place, a claimant is not entitled to raise a defence that the defendants are equally in breach of the rules: West Riding Automobile Co Ltd v West Yorkshire Passenger Transport [1999] All ER (D) 1165. 520 Power to strike out a statement of case

NOTE 5--The power of the court to strike out a statement of case if it appears that it is an abuse of process does not provide a power to strike out a claim at the end of a hearing where there is no suggestion that it had not been possible to hold a fair hearing: Ul-Haq v Shah[2009] EWCA Civ 542, [2010] 1 All ER 73.

521. Judgment without trial after striking out.

Where the court¹ makes an order which includes a term that the statement of case² of a party must be struck out³ if the party does not comply with the order⁴ and the party against whom the order was made does not comply with it⁵, any other party may obtain judgment with costs by filing⁶ a request for judgment if the order relates to the whole of a statement of case⁷ and, where the party wishing to obtain judgment is the claimant⁸, the claim is for:

- 569 (1) a specified amount of money⁹;
- 570 (2) an amount of money to be decided by the court¹⁰;
- 571 (3) delivery of goods where the claim form gives the defendant¹¹ the alternative of paying their value¹²; or
- 572 (4) any combination of these remedies¹³.

The request must state that the right to enter judgment has arisen because the court's order has not been complied with¹⁴.

In a case where the order including a term that the statement of case is to be struck out does not relate to the whole of the statement of case, and the conditions set out in heads (1) to (4) above do not apply¹⁵, a party must make an application¹⁶ if he wishes to obtain judgment against a party who has failed to comply with a term of an order as provided above¹⁷.

522. Setting aside judgment entered after striking out.

A party against whom the court¹ has entered judgment for failure to comply with a term of an order including a term that the statement of case of a party is to be struck out if the order is not complied with² may apply to the court to set the judgment aside³. The application must be made not more than 14 days after the judgment has been served⁴ on the party making the application⁵.

If the right to enter judgment had not arisen at the time when judgment was entered, the court must set aside the judgment⁶ but if the application to set aside is made for any other reason, the court will have regard to the criteria prescribed⁷ for granting relief from sanctions⁸.

523. Striking out as sanction for non-payment of certain fees.

In certain circumstances¹ where the claimant² has not paid a court fee by a specified date, and has not applied for exemption from or remission of such fee by that date, the claim will be struck out³ and he will be liable for costs incurred by the defendant⁴ unless the court orders otherwise⁵.

(5) SUMMARY JUDGMENT

524. Summary judgment; in general.

Part 24 of the Civil Procedure Rules¹ sets out the procedure by which the court² may decide a claim or a particular issue without a trial³.

The court may give summary judgment against a claimant⁴ or defendant⁵ on the whole of a claim or on a particular issue⁶ if it considers that the claimant has no real prospect of succeeding on the claim or issue⁷ or that the defendant has no real prospect of successfully defending the claim or issue⁸ and there is no other compelling reason why the case or issue should be disposed of at a trial⁹.

Where it appears to the court possible that a claim or a defence may succeed but improbable that it will do so, the court may make a conditional order that the claimant or the defendant pay a sum of money into court¹⁰ or take a specified step in relation to his claim or defence and providing that, if he fails to do so, the claim will be dismissed or his statement of case be struck out¹¹.

The court may give summary judgment against a claimant in any type of proceedings¹² and may give summary judgment against a defendant in any type of proceedings¹³ except:

- 573 (1) proceedings for possession of residential premises against a mortgagor¹⁴ or against a tenant or person holding over after the end of his tenancy, whose occupancy is protected within the meaning of the Rent Act 1977¹⁵ or the Housing Act 1988¹⁶; and
- 574 (2) proceedings for an Admiralty claim in rem¹⁷.

⁴ As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

⁵ As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

⁶ The application may be based on a point of law (including a question of construction of a document) or the evidence which may reasonably be expected to be available at trial or the lack of it, or a combination of these: Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 1.3. See eg Burgess v Governor of Maidstone Prison [2001] 1 WLR 93, CA (defendant contending claim manifestly bad in law); Dodson v Peter H Dodson Insurance Services (a firm) [2001] 3 All ER 75, [2001] 1 WLR 1012, CA (construction of insurance policy); Chiemgauer Membran Und Zeltbau GmbH v New Millenium Experience Co Ltd [2000] All ER (D) 2313 (construction of clause in contract). As to the overriding objective see PARA 33.

7 CPR 24.2(1)(a)(i). The words 'no real prospect of being successful or succeeding' do not need amplification, elaboration or explanation: Swain v Hillman[2001] 1 All ER 91, [1999] CPLR 779, CA. Early identification of the issues should take place at the case management stage in order to avoid the unsatisfactory position of having to allocate court time and call witnesses, only to have the matter summarily dismissed: see the observations of the court in James v Evans [2000] 3 EGLR 1, [2000] 42 EG 173, CA. For an application for summary judgment to succeed where a strike out application would not, the court first needs to be satisfied that all substantial relevant facts which are reasonably capable of being before the court are before it, that those facts are undisputed or that there is no real prospect of successfully disputing them and that there is no real prospect of oral evidence affecting the court's assessment of the facts: see S v Gloucestershire County Council [2001] Fam 313, [2000] 3 All ER 346, CA. As to applications to strike out see CPR 3.4; and PARA 520.

9 CPR 24.2(1)(b). See also CPR 3.4 (court may strike out a statement of case or part of a statement of case if it appears that it discloses no reasonable grounds for bringing or defending a claim); and PARA 520.

10 Ie under CPR 3.1(3) (see PARA 247), so that the money will stand as security for any sum payable by that party to any other party to the proceedings (see CPR 3.1(6A); and PARA 247). A condition should not be imposed unless the party has some prospect of complying with it: Chapple v Williams [1999] CPLR 731, CA. See eg Rainford House Ltd (in administrative receivership) v Cadogan Ltd [2001] All ER (D) 144 (Feb) (summary judgment stayed on condition of payment into court).

Notwithstanding, however, that it may be desirable for a claimant to receive some payment pending proper determination of his claim, a court has no power on an application for summary judgment under CPR Pt 24 to make an order for interim payment. Accordingly, a party should in practice make two applications, for summary judgment and in the alternative for an interim payment under CPR Pt 25 (see PARA 315 et seq): see Glencot Development and Design Co Ltd v Ben Barrett & Son (Contractors) Ltd [2001] BLR 207, [2001] All ER (D) 384 (Feb).

12 CPR 24.3(1). CPR 24.3 does not, however, override the specific provision of the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 69(1) allowing for jury trials in certain proceedings: see Safeway Stores plc v Tate[2001] QB 1120, [2001] 4 All ER 193, CA; but cf Alexander v Arts Council of Wales [2001] EWCA Civ 514, [2001] 4 All ER 205, [2001] 1 WLR 1840, explaining the decision in Safeway Stores plc v Tate[2001] QB 1120, [2001] 4 All ER 193, CA. 525. Procedure for obtaining summary judgment.

A claimant¹ may not apply for summary judgment until the defendant² against whom the application is made has filed an acknowledgment of service³ or a defence⁴, unless the court⁵ gives permission or a practice direction provides otherwise⁶. If a claimant applies for summary judgment before a defendant against whom the application is made has filed a defence, that defendant need not file a defence before the hearing⁷.

A party intending to make such an application must do so before or when filing his allocation questionnaire⁸. Where a party makes an application for such an order before a claim has been allocated to a track the court will not normally allocate the claim before the hearing of the application⁹. Where a party files an allocation questionnaire stating that he intends to make such an application but has not done so, the judge will usually direct that an allocation hearing is listed¹⁰. The application may be heard at that allocation hearing if the application notice has been issued and served in sufficient time¹¹.

Where a summary judgment hearing is fixed, the respondent (or the parties where the hearing is fixed of the court's own initiative) must be given at least 14 days' notice of the date fixed for the hearing¹² and the issues which it is proposed that the court will decide at the hearing¹³. A practice direction may, however, provide for a different period of notice to be given¹⁴.

1 As to the meaning of 'claimant' see PARA 18.

2 As to the meaning of 'defendant' see PARA 18.

3 As to the period for filing an acknowledgment of service see CPR 10.3; and PARA 186. As to the meaning of 'filing' see PARA 1832 note 8; and as to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

4 As to the period for filing a defence see CPR 15.4; and PARA 201. Where the claimant has failed to comply with any relevant pre-action protocol, an action for summary judgment will not normally be entertained before the defence has been filed or, alternatively, the time for doing so has expired: Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 2(6). As to pre-action protocols see PARAS 13, 107 et seq.

5 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

6 CPR 24.4(1). In civil proceedings against the Crown, as defined in CPR 66.1(2) (see PARA 1239 note 8), a claimant may not apply for summary judgment until after expiry of the period for filing a defence specified in CPR 15.4: CPR 24.4(1A). In a case where the claim is for specific performance of an agreement (whether in writing or not) for the sale or purchase of land (and similar related contracts) or for rescission of such a contract or for the forfeiture or return of deposits paid under such a contract, application for summary judgment may be made at any time after service of the claim form, whether or not time for acknowledging service has expired, whether or not the defendant has acknowledged service and even if particulars of claim have not been served: see Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 7.1. The application notice in such a case must have attached to it the text of the order sought by the claimant: para 7.2. That application notice, and a copy of every affidavit or witness statement in support and of any exhibit referred to therein, must be served on the defendant not less than four days before the hearing of the application, rather than the normal 14 days specified in CPR 24.4(3) (see the text and note 12); so that CPR 24.5 (see PARA 526) cannot, therefore, apply: Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 7.3.

7 CPR 24.4(2). See also CPR 12.3(3)(a)(ii) (claimant may not obtain a judgment in default of the filing of a defence if the defendant has applied for summary judgment); and PARA 507.

12 CPR 24.4(3)(a). As to the court's power to make orders on its own initiative and the notices required to be given see CPR 3.3; and PARA 251. As to time limits generally see PARA 88 et seq. Where the court proposes to make such an order of its own initiative, it will not allocate the claim to a track but instead it will either (1) fix a hearing, giving the parties at least 14 days' notice of the date of the hearing and of the issues which it is proposed that the court will decide; or (2) make an order directing a party to take the steps described in the order within a stated time and specifying the consequence of not taking those steps: Practice Direction--Case Management--Preliminary Stage: Allocation and Re-allocation PD 26A para 5.4(1), (2). Where the court decides at the hearing of an application or a hearing fixed under para 5.4(2)(a) (see head (1)) that the claim (or part of the claim) is to continue it may treat that hearing as an allocation hearing, allocate the claim and give case management directions, or give other directions: para 5.5.

13 CPR 24.4(3)(b). The application notice (see Form N244 or Form PF244 (for use in the Royal Courts of Justice) in The Civil Court Practice) must include a statement that it is an application for summary judgment made under CPR Pt 24 and that notice, or the evidence contained or referred to in it or served with it, must (1) identify concisely any point of law or provision in a document on which the applicant relies; and/or (2) state that it is made because the applicant believes that on the evidence the respondent has no real prospect of succeeding on the claim or issue or (as the case may be) of successfully defending the claim or issue, and in either case state that the applicant knows of no other reason why the disposal of the claim or issue should await trial: Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 2(2), (3). Unless the application notice itself contains all the evidence (if any) on which the applicant relies, the application notice must identify the written evidence on which the applicant relies; but this does not affect the applicant's right to file further evidence under CPR 24.5(2) (see PARA 526): Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 2(4). The application notice must draw the attention of the respondent to CPR 24.5(1) (procedure where respondent wishes to rely on written evidence at the hearing: see PARA 526): Practice Direction--the Summary Disposal of Claims PD 24 para 2(5). See also CPR Pt 23 (general rules about how to make an application: see PARA 303 et seq) and, in particular, CPR 23.6 (application notice must state what order is being sought and, briefly, why it is being sought: see PARA 306).

526. Evidence for the purposes of a summary judgment hearing.

If the respondent to an application for summary judgment wishes to rely on written evidence at the hearing, he must file¹ the written evidence and serve² copies on every other party to the application, at least seven days before the summary judgment hearing³. If the applicant wishes to rely on written evidence in reply, he must file the written evidence and serve a copy on the respondent at least three days before the summary judgment hearing⁴.

Where a summary judgment hearing is fixed by the court⁵ of its own initiative:

575 (1) any party who wishes to rely on written evidence at the hearing must file the written evidence and, unless the court orders otherwise, serve copies on every other party to the proceedings, at least seven days before the date of the hearing⁶;

576 (2) any party who wishes to rely on written evidence at the hearing in reply to any other party's written evidence must file the written evidence in reply and, unless the court orders otherwise, serve copies on every other party to the proceedings, at least three days before the date of the hearing⁷.

These provisions do not, however, require written evidence to be filed if it has already been filed or to be served on a party on whom it has already been served⁸.

527. Determination of a summary judgment application.

The hearing of a summary judgment application will normally take place before a master or a district judge but the master or district judge may direct that the application be heard by a High Court judge (if the case is in the High Court) or a circuit judge (if the case is in a county court)¹.

When the court determines a summary judgment application it may give directions as to the filing² and service³ of a defence⁴ and further directions about the management of the case⁵.

The orders the court may make on an application for summary judgment include:

- 577 (1) judgment on the claim;
- 578 (2) the striking out⁶ or dismissal of the claim;
- 579 (3) the dismissal of the application;
- 580 (4) a conditional order⁷;
- 581 (5) summary assessment of costs⁸.

528. Setting aside or varying an order for summary judgment.

(6) STAY OF PROCEEDINGS

529. In general.

A stay of proceedings¹ arises under an order of the court² which puts a stop or 'stay' on the further conduct of the proceedings in that court at the stage which they have then reached, so that the parties are precluded thereafter from taking any further step in the proceedings³. The object of the order is to avoid the trial or hearing of the claim taking place, where the court thinks it is just and convenient to make the order, to prevent undue prejudice being occasioned to the opposite party or to prevent the abuse of process.

The court's power to stay proceedings may be exercised under particular statutory provisions⁴, or under the Civil Procedure Rules⁵ or under the court's inherent jurisdiction⁶, or under one or all of these powers, since they are cumulative, not exclusive, in their operation.

1 A stay of proceedings must be distinguished from (1) a stay of execution (see CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 47 r 1; Ferdinand Wagner (a firm) v Laubscher Bros & Co (a firm)[1970] 2 QB 313, [1970] 2 All ER 174, CA; and PARA 1361); and (2) stay pending an appeal (see CPR 52.7; and PARA 1669). Given that Court of Appeal judges are available even out of hours to consider an immediate stay of a county court order, it is unnecessary for a limited stay to be granted in order to give a claimant more time: A (Child) (Change of Residence)(2007) Times, 27 June, CA.

As to the stay of particular proceedings eg BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY; MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW vol 73 (2009) PARA 845 et seq. As to the restraint of legal proceedings by injunction see PARA 316 et seq. As to the stay of proceedings by vexatious litigants see PARA 258. As to lis alibi pendens see PARA 536; and CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 128.

2 A stay of proceedings may take effect without a court order (1) if a defendant has admitted part of a claim and the claimant fails to return the required notice within the 14-day time limit set out in CPR 14.5 (see PARA 192); (2) if a defendant has admitted the whole of a claim for an unspecified amount of money and the claimant fails to file a request for judgment within the 14-day time limit set out in CPR 14.6 (see PARA 193); (3) if a defendant has offered to pay a sum of money in satisfaction of a claim for an unspecified amount of money and the defendant does not return the required notice within the 14-day time limit specified in CPR 14.7 (see PARA 194); (4) where the claimant fails to respond within the 28-day time limit set out in CPR 15.10 to a defendant's defence that an amount of money claimed has been paid (see PARA 203); (5) where neither party has taken any active steps in the proceedings and at least six months have elapsed since the period for filing the defence (see CPR 15.11; and PARA 205); (6) on acceptance of a Part 36 offer (defined in PARA 115 note 1) in relation to the whole claim, unless the claimant is a child or mental protected party (defined in PARA 222 notes 3, 1 respectively) (see CPR 36.11(1); and PARA 737). Other exceptions may be where the claimant is adjudged bankrupt (Realisations Industrielles et Commerciales SA v Loescher & Partners[1957] 3 All ER 241, [1957] 1 WLR 1026, per Lynskey J), and where the claimant becomes a mental protected party (see Yonge v Toynbee[1910] 1 KB 215, CA).

3 Such an order will not prevent the defendant from applying to dismiss the action: La Grange v McAndrew(1879) 4 QBD 210.

5 See PARA 532.

530. Effect of stay of proceedings.

A stay of proceedings is not the equivalent of a judgment or of a discontinuance, and may be removed if proper grounds are shown, even if the stay is imposed by a consent order¹. In contrast with a judgment for the defendant or the dismissal or discontinuance of a claim, in the case of a stay of proceedings, whether conditional or absolute, the claim still subsists²; it is still 'pending'³, and the stay is therefore always potentially capable of being removed⁴.

A stay may be removed if good cause or proper grounds are shown or the continuance of the stay could cause or produce injustice or prejudice or where there has been a change in the law⁵. In the case of a general stay, an application for its removal is necessary⁶. On the other hand, the order to stay proceedings may define the circumstances in which it will be removed. For example, the order may provide that a specified act or condition should be performed or complied with within a specified time, otherwise the claim will be dismissed or the claimant will be at liberty to enter judgment within a specified time. In these circumstances the stay is removed immediately upon performance or compliance with the specified act or condition, and no application for the removal of the stay is necessary.

1 Cooper v Williams [1963] 2 QB 567, [1963] 2 All ER 282, CA. An order for the stay of proceedings does not have the effect of a res judicata: Cooper v Williams [1963] 2 QB 567, [1963] 2 All ER 282, CA. The former doubt raised by Willis J in Selig v Lion [1891] 1 QB 513 at 515, DC, whether a stay was a discontinuance which could not be removed or whether it was not the equivalent of a discontinuance and so could be removed has been answered by the Court of Appeal in favour of the second view: Cooper v Williams [1963] 2 QB 567, [1963] 2 All ER 282, CA. As to discontinuance see PARA 723 et seq.

2 Empson v Smith [1966] 1 QB 426, [1965] 2 All ER 881, CA.

3 See MacCabe v Joynt [1901] 2 IR 115. See also Thomas v Exeter Flying Co (1887) 18 QBD 822, DC (stay by withdrawal of juror).

4 See Empson v Smith [1966] 1 QB 426, [1965] 2 All ER 881, CA. So long as proceedings are only stayed, either party can come to the court: see Harrington v Ramage [1907] WN 137. In some cases, however, the restrictions or conditions imposed by the order to stay have the effect of bringing the entire proceedings to an end, in which event the stay will operate as a dismissal; and it may thereafter be necessary to examine closely the form of the order to determine whether the stay was intended to be permanent in the sense that no proper grounds can be adduced for its removal.

5 See Empson v Smith [1966] 1 QB 426, [1965] 2 All ER 881, CA, where there was a change in the law since the stay was imposed. See also Bennett v Gamgee (1876) 2 Ex D 11 (affd (1877) 46 LJQB 204, CA); Selig v Lion [1891] 1 QB 513, DC; Bean v Flower (1895) 73 LT 371, CA.

6 The application must be made in accordance with CPR Pt 23: see PARA 303 et seq. In deciding whether to lift the stay, the court must have regard to the overriding objective of the Civil Procedure Rules: see CPR 1.1, 1.2; and PARA 33.

531. Stay under statutory powers.

Power to stay proceedings is conferred by a number of particular statutes, including (by way of example which does not purport to constitute an exhaustive list) the Arbitration Act 1996¹, the Insolvency Act 1986², the Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973³, the Law Reform (Husband and Wife) Act 1962⁴ and the Supreme Court Act 1981⁵.

532. Stay under the Civil Procedure Rules.

Except where the Civil Procedure Rules provide otherwise, the court¹ may stay² the whole or part of any proceedings or judgment either generally or until a specified date or event³.

Where the court makes an order of its own initiative without hearing the parties or giving them an opportunity to make representations⁴, a party affected by the order may apply to have it stayed and the order must contain a statement of the right to make such an application⁵.

Proceedings may be stayed to allow for settlement of a case⁶ and claims may be stayed under a group litigation order (a 'GLO')⁷ until further order⁸.

These powers are part of the court's general powers of case management and must be exercised in accordance with the overriding objective⁹.

Unless the court orders otherwise, an appeal does not generally operate as a stay¹⁰.

Subject to certain exceptions, under the transitional arrangements made by the practice direction supplementing Part 51 of the rules, if any pre-existing proceedings did not come before a judge, at a hearing or on paper, between 26 April 1999 and 25 April 2000, those proceedings were automatically stayed¹¹. Any party to those proceedings might, however, apply for the stay to be lifted¹².

An application to stay civil proceedings pending the determination of related criminal proceedings may be made by any party to the civil proceedings or by the prosecutor or any defendant in the criminal proceedings¹³.

The exceptions are: (1) where the case had been given a fixed trial date which was after 25 April 2000; (2) personal injury cases where there was no issue on liability but the proceedings had been adjourned by court order to determine the prognosis; (3) where the court was dealing with the continuing administration of an estate or a trust or a receivership; and (4) applications relating to funds in court: see para 19(3). As to funds in court see PARA 1548 et seq.

532 Stay under the Civil Procedure Rules

NOTE 3--See Anglo Swiss Holdings Ltd v Packman Lucas [2009] EWHC 3212 (TCC), (2009) 128 ConLR 67 (stay of proceedings pending compliance with adjudicator's decision).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/13. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL/(6) STAY OF PROCEEDINGS/533. Stay under inherent jurisdiction; in general.

533. Stay under inherent jurisdiction; in general.

The inherent jurisdiction of the court to stay proceedings is preserved by the Supreme Court Act 1981¹. This jurisdiction is, of course, discretionary², since it is exercisable where the court thinks fit to do so³, and the court may impose terms⁴. The court's general jurisdiction to stay proceedings in proper cases is not limited by the Civil Procedure Rules, and indeed is distinct from the jurisdiction conferred by the rules⁵, since the two sources of the court's power continue to exist side by side and may be invoked cumulatively or alternatively⁶.

Under its inherent jurisdiction the court has power to order the stay of proceedings or further proceedings in a variety of circumstances. These include power to stay proceedings:

- 582 (1) where there has been an abuse of the process of the court⁷;
- 583 (2) by striking out a notice of appeal where it is plainly not competent⁸;
- 584 (3) unless and until the claimant in a claim for damages for personal injuries submits himself to a medical examination of a reasonable character which is reasonably required⁹;
- 585 (4) unless and until the claimant gives security for costs as ordered¹⁰;
- 586 (5) where the costs of a previous claim or previous proceedings have not been paid¹¹;
- 587 (6) where the proceedings are instituted or continued without lawful authority by the claimant¹²;
- 588 (7) upon an agreement to refer the matter to a foreign court or tribunal¹³;
- 589 (8) where the parties have concluded an agreement for the compromise or settlement of a pending claim¹⁴;
- 590 (9) where a claim is begun by a minor or mental protected party without a litigation friend¹⁵;
- 591 (10) where there are cross-claims between the same parties¹⁶.

The court has an inherent jurisdiction to adjourn proceedings for a stated time¹⁷, but not generally or for an unreasonably long time¹⁸.

1 The Supreme Court Act 1981 s 49(3) provides that nothing in that Act is to affect the power of the Court of Appeal or the High Court to stay any proceedings before it, where it thinks fit to do so, either of its own motion or on the application of any person, whether or not a party to the proceedings. This provision repeats in substance the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 41 proviso (a), and possibly also s 41 proviso (b) (both repealed), as to which see Re Wickham, Marony v Taylor (1887) 35 ChD 272, CA, although, of course, those provisions did not confer any new jurisdiction on the court: see The James Westoll [1905] P 47, CA. It may also be useful as well as necessary to refer to the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 19(2)(b), which provides that the High Court may exercise all such other jurisdiction (ie jurisdiction not conferred on it by that Act or any other Act), whether civil or criminal, as was exercisable by it immediately before the commencement of the Act (ie 1 January 1982: s 153(2)), including jurisdiction conferred on a judge of the High Court by any statutory provision. Jurisdiction under its inherent powers was exercisable by the High Court before that date in a great variety of circumstances to order the stay of proceedings. The effect of s 19(2)(b) is to confer statutory authority on the exercise of this jurisdiction, and it may, somewhat anomalously, appear that the powers to stay proceedings under the inherent jurisdiction of the court are now exercisable under its statutory jurisdiction. 8 Aviagents Ltd v Balstravest Investments Ltd [1966] 1 All ER 450, [1966] 1 WLR 150, CA. This power can, of course, only be exercised by the appeal court itself.

9 Edmeades v Thames Board Mills Ltd [1969] 2 QB 67, [1969] 2 All ER 127, CA. The onus is on the party applying for such a stay to show that the examination is reasonable in the interest of justice (Lane v Willis [1972] 1 All ER 430, [1972] 1 WLR 326, CA), but if the defendant requests that the medical examination be carried out by a particular medical consultant, the onus is on the claimant to show some substantial ground of refusal (eg that the particular doctor is likely to conduct his examination unkindly or make his report unfavourably: Starr v National Coal Board [1977] 1 All ER 243, [1977] 1 WLR 63, CA). As to weighing the reasonableness of the defendant's request for an examination and the claimant's refusal see Aspinall v Sterling Mansell Ltd (1978) [1981] 3 All ER 866; Prescott v Bulldog Tools Ltd [1981] 3 All ER 869. Unless good and substantial reasons are put before it, the court will ordinarily impose a condition that the claimant's doctor should be present at the claimant's medical examination: Hall v Avon Area Health Authority (Teaching) [1980] 1 All ER 516, [1980] 1 WLR 481, CA. Indeed, when making an order staying the proceedings unless and until the claimant submits himself to a medical examination on behalf of the defendant, the court will ordinarily make such an order unconditionally, and will not impose a term that the report of the defendant's medical adviser be disclosed to the claimant: Mearity v DJ Ryan & Sons Ltd [1980] 2 All ER 832, [1980] 1 WLR 1237, CA, not following and perhaps negating Clarke v Martlew [1973] QB 58, [1972] 3 All ER 764, CA, and McGinley v Burke [1973] 2 All ER 1010, [1973] 1 WLR 990, CA. On the other hand, it has been held that the court will not order a stay of the action by a widow claiming damages under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 if she refuses to submit to a medical examination, in the absence of some concrete basis for such examination, such as that she might be suffering from a grave or terminal disease: Baugh v Delta Water Fittings Ltd [1971] 3 All ER 258, [1971] 1 WLR 1295; but this is questionable. 534. Abuse of process.

The most important ground on which the court exercises its inherent jurisdiction to stay proceedings is that of abuse of process¹. This power will be exercised where the proceedings are shown to be frivolous, vexatious or harassing or to be manifestly groundless or in which there is clearly no cause of action in law or in equity². The applicant for a stay on this ground must show not merely that the claimant might not, or probably would not, succeed, but that he could not possibly succeed on the basis of the pleadings and the facts of the case³.

It is an abuse of process to raise in subsequent proceedings matters which could and should have been litigated in earlier proceedings⁴.

A party may be guilty of an abuse of the process of the court even though he may comply with the strict literal terms of an applicable rule of law, where he does so for improper or ulterior motives or purposes⁵.

The court will not stay pending proceedings on the ground that there is prospective legislation before Parliament which might affect the rights of the parties⁶; and if there are concurrent civil and criminal proceedings against the same defendant arising out of the same matter, the court has a discretion whether to stay the civil proceedings pending the conclusion of the criminal proceedings, taking into account all the circumstances⁷.

1 It has been said that this is a power which ought to be exercised sparingly and only in an exceptional case (see Lawrance v Lord Norreys (1890) 15 App Cas 210, HL; Dyson v A-G [1911] 1 KB 410, CA; and see also Metropolitan Bank Ltd v Pooley (1885) 10 App Cas 210, HL; Salaman v Secretary of State in Council of India [1906] 1 KB 613, CA), but striking out and summary judgment are now more readily available under the Civil Procedure Rules (see PARA 520 et seq). It is an abuse of process to proceed by way of an ordinary claim where the proper procedure would be an application for judicial review: see O'Reilly v Mackman [1983] 2 AC 237, [1982] 3 All ER 1124, HL. See also Halifax Financial Services Ltd v Intuitive Systems Ltd [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 303 (no stay will be ordered where a contractual dispute resolution procedure simply provides for negotiations, as it is not a condition precedent to legal proceedings).

535. Forum non conveniens.

Although the claimant has the initial choice of forum in which to bring proceedings, the court retains an inherent jurisdiction to stay or dismiss the claim or to transfer¹ it to another forum in England and Wales where this course is available. The principles to be applied in determining whether the court will grant or refuse a stay of proceedings brought in England by a claimant who is not English-based have been expressed as follows:

- 592 (1) mere balance of convenience is not a sufficient ground for depriving a claimant of the advantage of bringing his claim in an English court if it is otherwise properly brought; and
- 593 (2) in order to justify a stay two conditions must be satisfied, one positive and one negative; (a) the defendant must satisfy the court that there is another forum to whose jurisdiction he is amenable in which justice can be done between the parties at substantially less inconvenience or expense; and (b) the stay must not deprive the claimant of a legitimate personal or juridical advantage to him if he invoked the jurisdiction of the English court².

Where a claim is brought by an English-based claimant against a foreigner and there is nothing in the claim to connect it with England, the court may stay the proceedings³. Where the court lacks jurisdiction, the fact that due service has been effected on the defendant will not prevent the claim being stayed or dismissed⁴.

Note that in all the cases cited in this paragraph which predate the introduction of the new civil procedure, the claimant is referred to as the 'plaintiff': see PARA 18. As to the new civil procedure see PARA 24 et seq.

A stay will normally be granted if the defendant satisfies the court that a forum other than England is the appropriate forum, ie a forum in which the case may be tried more suitably for the interests of all the parties and for the ends of justice; the mere fact that the claimant has a legitimate personal or juridical advantage in proceedings in England cannot be decisive: Spiliada Maritime Corp v Cansulex Ltd, The Spiliada [1987] AC 460, [1986] 3 All ER 843, HL. [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep 227. In determining whether justice requires that a trial takes place in the English court, the court may consider the question of whether an alternative forum is available, in practical terms, to the plaintiff: Askin v Absa Bank Ltd [1999] 13 LS Gaz R 32, (1999) Times, 23 February, CA. Where in a particular foreign forum costs do not follow the event, the English court may reasonably and properly conclude that litigation in that foreign forum would not result in substantial justice being done because in financial terms damages awarded to a successful claimant would necessarily and substantially be diminished by costs which he would have to pay in that foreign forum, but not in England; the court may even allow this factor to tip the balance in favour of litigation in England: see Roneleigh Ltd v MII Exports Inc [1989] 1 WLR 619, 133 Sol Jo 485, CA.

NOTE 2--Equitas, cited, reported at [2009] Lloyd's Rep IR 227.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/13. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDINGS WITHOUT TRIAL/(6) STAY OF PROCEEDINGS/536. Lis alibi pendens.

536. Lis alibi pendens.

Where proceedings involving the same cause of action and between the same parties are brought in the courts of different contracting states¹, then under the Brussels and Lugano Conventions any court other than the court first seised must of its own motion stay proceedings until such time as the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established². The same rule applies in relation to such proceedings brought in the courts of different member states³; moreover where the jurisdiction of the court first seised is established, any court other than the court first seised must decline jurisdiction in favour of that court⁴.

Where the above provisions do not apply, then the following common law principles have been established. Where a claim is pending in a foreign court, and a second claim is begun in England between the same parties claiming substantially the same remedy or relief, the court may adopt one of three courses:

- 594 (1) it may put the claimant to his election with which claim he will proceed⁵; or
- 595 (2) it may stay all proceedings in England⁶; or
- 596 (3) it may grant an injunction restraining the prosecution of the foreign proceedings⁷.

A claimant should not lightly be denied the right to sue in an English court if jurisdiction is properly founded even in proceedings between foreigners relating to foreign matters, subject to the court's residual power to stay the proceedings⁸. Where there is no risk of injustice to the defendant, the court will not stay a claim against him in England on the ground that he had brought a claim in a foreign court⁹.

Where the claims in the English and the foreign proceedings are not alike or the relief or remedy sought is different, or where the circumstances are such that the claimant will obtain some benefit or advantage in bringing two claims, he will not be put to his election, nor will a stay be granted¹⁰. Where the claimant in the foreign proceedings is the defendant in the English claim, the case against granting a stay is regarded as strong¹¹.

An English claim will be stayed where there is no claim actually pending elsewhere if the cause of action arises out of the jurisdiction and proceedings may be brought where it arises at less trouble and expense to all parties¹²; and the English court will grant an injunction to restrain a person within the jurisdiction from instituting proceedings in a foreign court which would be contrary to equity and good conscience¹³ or from reaping the fruits of a foreign judgment obtained in breach of contract or by fraud¹⁴.

The doctrine of lis alibi pendens will not apply when the foreign proceedings are, or are virtually, at an end or halted¹⁵.

It is appropriate to stay proceedings pending the outcome of a decision of the European Court of Justice which will put an end to the matters in issue in the English proceedings¹⁶.

4 See EC Council Regulation 44/2001 (OJ L12, 16.1.2001, p 1) art 27(2). Where related claims are pending in the courts of different member states, any court other than the court first seised may stay its proceedings: see art 28. When claims come within the exclusive jurisdiction of several courts, any court other than the court first seised must decline jurisdiction in favour of that court: see art 29. As to when a court is deemed to be seised see art 30. Article 28 requires an assessment of the degree of connection, and then a value judgment as to the expediency of hearing the two actions together in order to avoid the risk of inconsistent judgments; it does not say that any possibility of inconsistent judgments means that they were inevitably related: see Research in Motion UK Ltd v Visto Corp [2008] EWCA Civ 153, [2008] 2 All ER (Comm) 560.

7 The Tropaioforos (No 2) [1962] 1 Lloyd's Rep 410. Where the foreign court has jurisdiction to restrain the bringing of a claim in England, the English court will take this fact into account in refusing to stay the claim: Western Electric Co Inc v Racal-Milgo Ltd [1979] RPC 501, CA. As a general rule, before an anti-suit injunction can be granted by an English court to restrain a person from pursuing proceedings in a foreign jurisdiction, comity requires that the English forum must have a sufficient interest in, or connection with, the matter in question to justify the indirect interference with the foreign court which such an injunction entails. That principle must not, however, be interpreted too rigidly, and in cases where the conduct of the foreign state exercising jurisdiction is such as to deprive it of the respect normally required by comity, no such limit is required in the exercise of the jurisdiction to grant an anti-suit injunction: Airbus Industrie GIE v Patel [1999] 1 AC 119, [1998] 2 All ER 257, HL. The principles applicable to the grant by an English court of an injunction to restrain the commencement or continuance of proceedings in a foreign jurisdiction are not the same as those applicable to the grant of a stay of English proceedings in favour of a more appropriate foreign forum, and where a remedy for a particular wrong is available both in an English court and a foreign court the English court will normally only restrain the claimant from pursuing the foreign proceedings if it would be vexatious or oppressive for him to do so. As a general rule, a decision to grant an injunction restraining foreign proceedings presupposes that the English court will provide the natural forum for the trial of the claim and that, as a matter of justice, the injustice to the defendant if the claimant is allowed to pursue the foreign proceedings outweighs the injustice to the claimant if he is not allowed to do so, since the court will not grant an injunction restraining foreign proceedings if to do so will unjustly deprive the claimant of advantages in the foreign forum: see Société Nationale Industrielle Aérospatiale v Lee Kui Jak [1987] AC 871, [1987] 3 All ER 510, PC.

537. Two claims or proceedings on the same matter.

Prima facie it is vexatious and oppressive for the claimant to sue concurrently in two English courts or tribunals, and the court will stay the second proceedings¹. A defendant will not be called upon to meet, in substance and in reality, the same claim or charge he has already answered in earlier litigation². If there are two courts faced with substantially the same question or issue, that question or issue should be determined in only one of those courts, and the court will if necessary stay one of the claims³. 14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS

(1) DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS

538. Disclosure; in general.

The general rules relating to disclosure and inspection of documents¹ apply to all claims except a claim on the small claims track².

A party discloses a document by stating that the document exists or has existed³. For these purposes, 'document' means anything in which information is recorded and a copy of a document is anything onto which information contained or recorded in the document has been copied by whatever means, whether directly or indirectly⁴. A party need not disclose more than one copy of a document⁵. A copy of a document that contains a modification, obliteration or other marking or feature on which a party intends to rely or which adversely affects his own case or another party's case or supports another party's case must be treated as a separate document⁶.

A party's duty to disclose documents⁷ is limited to documents which are or have been in his control⁸. A party has or has had a document in his control if it is or was in his physical possession⁹, he has or has had a right to possession of it¹⁰ or he has or has had a right to inspect or take copies of it¹¹.

Certain documents are privileged from disclosure¹².

1 I.e. CPR Pt 31: see PARAS 112, 538 et seq. As to the right of inspection see PARA 539; and as to objections to production for inspection see PARA 555 et seq.

2 CPR 31.1(1), (2). As to the small claims track see CPR Pt 27; and PARA 274 et seq.

3 CPR 31.2.

Electronic documents, including e-mail and other electronic communications, word processed documents and databases are included in the definition and are the subject of special provisions: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 paras 2A.1-2A.5; and PARA 545. A video film or recording is a document for these purposes; accordingly where disclosure has been made in accordance with CPR Pt 31, whether as part of standard disclosure under CPR 31.6 (see PARA 542) or the duty of continuing disclosure under CPR 31.11 (see PARA 546), the claimant is deemed to have admitted the authenticity of the film unless he serves a notice that he wishes the document to be proved at trial: Rall v Hume[2001] EWCA Civ 146, [2001] 3 All ER 248.

5 CPR 31.9(1).

542. Disclosure limited to standard disclosure.

An order to give disclosure¹ is an order to give standard disclosure unless the court² directs otherwise³. The court may dispense with or limit standard disclosure⁴ and the parties may agree in writing to dispense with or to limit standard disclosure⁵.

Standard disclosure requires a party to disclose only the documents⁶:

- 600 (1) on which he relies⁷;
- 601 (2) which adversely affect his own case⁸;
- 602 (3) which adversely affect another party's case⁹; or
- 603 (4) which support another party's case¹⁰; and
- 604 (5) which he is required to disclose by a relevant practice direction¹¹.

1 As to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538. The court may make an order requiring standard disclosure under CPR 28.3 (directions in relation to cases on the fast track: see PARA 287) and under CPR 29.2 (case management in relation to cases on the multi-track: see PARA 294). 543. Duty of search.

When giving standard disclosure¹, a party is required to make a reasonable search for documents² which adversely affect his own or another party's case or support another party's case or which he is required to disclose³ by a relevant practice direction⁴. The factors relevant in deciding the reasonableness of a search include the following:

- 605 (1) the number of documents involved⁵;
- 606 (2) the nature and complexity of the proceedings⁶;
- 607 (3) the ease and expense of retrieval of any particular document⁷; and
- 608 (4) the significance of any document which is likely to be located during the search⁸.

The reasonableness of a search is also affected by whether it would be proportionate or disproportionate to the issues in the case⁹. When a party has not searched for a category or class of document on the grounds that to do so would be unreasonable, he must state this in his disclosure statement¹⁰ and identify the category or class of document¹¹.

1 As to standard disclosure see PARA 542; and as to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538.

2 As to the meaning of 'document' see PARA 538.

5 CPR 31.7(2)(a).

6 CPR 31.7(2)(b).

7 CPR 31.7(2)(c).

8 CPR 31.7(2)(d).

9 See CPR 31.3(2); and PARA 539. The parties must bear in mind the overriding principle of proportionality (see CPR 1.1(2)(c); and PARA 33); eg it may be reasonable to decide not to search for documents coming into existence before some particular date, or to limit the search to documents in some particular place or places, or to documents falling into particular categories: Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 2.

10 As to the disclosure statement see CPR 31.10; and PARA 544.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(1) DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS/544. Procedure for standard disclosure.

544. Procedure for standard disclosure.

The procedure for giving standard disclosure¹ is that each party must make, and serve² on every other party, a list of documents³ in the relevant practice form⁴. The list must identify the documents in a convenient order and manner and as concisely as possible⁵ and must indicate those documents in respect of which the party claims a right or duty to withhold inspection⁶ and those documents which are no longer in the party's control⁷ and what has happened to the latter⁸. The list must include a disclosure statement⁹ to be made by the party disclosing the documents:

- 609 (1) setting out the extent of the search that has been made to locate documents which he is required to disclose¹⁰;
- 610 (2) certifying that he understands the duty to disclose documents¹¹; and
- 611 (3) certifying that to the best of his knowledge he has carried out that duty¹².

Where the party making the disclosure statement is a company, firm, association or other organisation, the statement must also identify the person making the statement¹³ and explain why he is considered an appropriate person to make it¹⁴.

The parties may agree in writing to disclose documents without making a list¹⁵ and to disclose documents without the disclosing party making a disclosure statement¹⁶.

A disclosure statement may be made by a person who is not a party where this is permitted by a relevant practice direction¹⁷.

1 As to standard disclosure see PARA 542; and as to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538.

2 As to the meaning of 'service' see PARA 138 note 2.

3 As to the meaning of 'document' see PARA 538.

4 CPR 31.10(1), (2). The practice form is Form N265 in The Civil Court Practice: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 3.1.

5 CPR 31.10(3). It will normally be necessary to list the documents in date order, to number them consecutively and to give each a concise description (eg letter, claimant to defendant). Where there are a large number of documents all falling into a particular category the disclosing party may list those documents as a category rather than individually: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 3.2.

6 CPR 31.10(4)(a). As to documents which are privileged from disclosure see PARA 555 et seq. He must state in writing the grounds on which he claims that right or duty: see CPR 31.19(3), (4); and PARA 555. The statement must indicate the document, or part of a document, to which the claim relates: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 paras 4.5, 4.6.

7 CPR 31.10(4)(b)(i). As to when a document is in a party's control see PARA 538.

8 See CPR 31.10(4)(b)(ii).

9 CPR 31.10(5). For the precise wording of the disclosure statement see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.1, Annex.

10 CPR 31.10(6)(a). The disclosure statement should expressly state that the disclosing party believes the extent of the search to have been reasonable in all the circumstances, and, in setting out the extent of the search, draw attention to any particular limitations on the extent of the search which were adopted for proportionality reasons and give the reasons why the limitations were adopted, eg the difficulty or expense that a search not subject to those limitations would have entailed or the marginal relevance of categories of documents omitted from the search: Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.2.

11 CPR 31.10(6)(b). If the disclosing party has a legal representative acting for him, the legal representative must endeavour to ensure that the person making the disclosure statement, whether the disclosing party or, in the case of a company, firm, association or other organisation, some other person, understands the duty of disclosure under CPR Pt 31: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.4. As to the meaning of 'legal representative' see PARA 1833 note 13. As to the consequences of making a false disclosure statement see CPR 31.23; and PARA 554.

14 CPR 31.10(7)(b). The details given in the disclosure statement about the person making the statement must include his name and address and the office or position he holds in the disclosing party or the basis upon which he makes the statement on behalf of the party: Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.3.

15 CPR 31.10(8)(a).

16 CPR 31.10(8)(b).

17 CPR 31.10(9). An insurer or the Motor Insurers' Bureau may sign a disclosure statement on behalf of a party where the insurer or the Motor Insurers' Bureau has a financial interest in the result of proceedings brought wholly or partially by or against that party: Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.7. CPR 31.10(7) and Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 4.3 (see the text and notes 13-14) apply to the insurer or the Motor Insurers' Bureau making such a statement: para 4.7.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(1) DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS/545. Electronic disclosure.

545. Electronic disclosure.

The definition of 'document' in the rules as to disclosure¹ extends to electronic documents, including e-mail and other electronic communications, word processed documents and databases. In addition to documents that are readily accessible from computer systems and other electronic devices and media, the definition covers those documents that are stored on servers and back-up systems and electronic documents that have been 'deleted'. It also extends to additional information stored and associated with electronic documents known as metadata². Such documents require special consideration.

Thus, the parties should, prior to the first case management conference³, discuss any issues that may arise regarding searches for and the preservation of electronic documents⁴. The parties should co-operate at an early stage as to the format in which electronic copy documents are to be provided on inspection⁵. In the case of difficulty or disagreement, the matter should be referred to a judge for directions at the earliest practical date, if possible at the first case management conference⁶.

The existence of electronic documents impacts upon the extent of the reasonable search required for the purposes of standard disclosure⁷. The factors that may be relevant in deciding the reasonableness of a search for electronic documents include (but are not limited to) the following:

- 612 (1) the number of documents involved;
- 613 (2) the nature and complexity of the proceedings;
- 614 (3) the ease and expense of retrieval of any particular document, which include:
- 68
 - 11. (a) the accessibility of electronic documents or data including e-mail communications on computer systems, servers, back-up systems and other electronic devices or media that may contain such documents taking into account alterations or developments in hardware or software systems used by the disclosing party and/or available to enable access to such documents;
 - 12. (b) the location of relevant electronic documents, data, computer systems, servers, back-up systems and other electronic devices or media that may contain such documents;
 - 13. (c) the likelihood of locating relevant data;
 - 14. (d) the cost of recovering any electronic documents;
 - 15. (e) the cost of disclosing and providing inspection of any relevant electronic documents;
 - 16. (f) the likelihood that electronic documents will be materially altered in the course of recovery, disclosure or inspection;
- 69
 - 615 (4) the significance of any document which is likely to be located during the search⁸.

It may be reasonable to search some or all of the parties' electronic storage systems. In some circumstances, it may be reasonable to search for electronic documents by means of keyword searches (agreed as far as possible between the parties) even where a full review of each and every document would be unreasonable. There may be other forms of electronic search that may be appropriate in particular circumstances⁹.

546. Duty of disclosure continues during proceedings.

Any duty of disclosure¹ continues until the proceedings are concluded². If documents³ to which that duty extends come to a party's notice at any time during the proceedings, he must immediately notify every other party⁴. If his list of documents has already been prepared and served⁵, he must prepare and serve a supplemental list⁶.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(1) DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS/547. Specific disclosure or inspection.

547. Specific disclosure or inspection.

The court¹ may make an order for specific disclosure or specific inspection².

An order for specific disclosure is an order that a party must do one or more of the following things:

- 616 (1) disclose specific documents or classes of documents specified in the order³;
- 617 (2) carry out a search to the extent stated in the order⁴;
- 618 (3) disclose any documents located as a result of that search⁵.

An order for specific inspection is an order that a party permit inspection of specific documents inspection of which he has stated in his disclosure statement he will not permit on the grounds that it would be disproportionate to the issues in the case⁶ do so⁷.

If a party believes that the disclosure of documents given by a disclosing party is inadequate he may make an application for an order for specific disclosure⁸. The application notice must specify the order that the applicant intends to ask the court to make and must be supported by evidence⁹.

In deciding whether or not to make an order for specific disclosure the court will take into account all the circumstances of the case and, in particular, the overriding objective¹⁰. If, however, the court concludes that the party from whom specific disclosure is sought has failed adequately to comply with the obligations imposed by an order for disclosure¹¹ the court will usually make such order as is necessary to ensure that those obligations are properly complied with¹².

1 As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

2 CPR 31.12(1). As to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538. An order for specific disclosure may in an appropriate case direct a party to carry out a search for any documents which it is reasonable to suppose may contain information which may enable the party applying for disclosure either to advance his own case or to damage that of the party giving disclosure, or lead to a train of inquiry which has either of those consequences, and to disclose any documents found as a result of that search: see Practice Direction--Disclosure and Inspection PD 31 para 5.5.

Where specific disclosure is ordered it must be precise as to its terms; it must not, eg, order the disclosure of 'all documents relating to the party's financial and tax affairs which are necessary to prove the quantum of the counterclaim': Morgans (a Firm) v Needham [1999] 44 LS Gaz R 41, CA. Such an order requires stronger justification under CPR Pt 31 than was the case under the previous rules of procedure and must not be made in relation to unpleaded matters: Amoco (UK) Exploration Co v British American Offshore Ltd (23 February 2000, unreported) per Longmore J.

See Digicel (St Lucia) Ltd v Cable and Wireless plc [2008] EWHC 2522 (Ch), [2008] All ER (D) 226 (Oct) (application for specific disclosure by the defendants of certain classes of electronic documents, seeking an order that the defendants restore relevant back-up tapes for the purpose of searching for the e-mail accounts of certain former employees; held it was inappropriate to make a simple order pursuant to CPR 31.12(2)(b) that the defendants restore the identified back-up tapes so far as was necessary to identify and search certain e-mail accounts, as such an order did not address the possibility that restoration might not be possible or that it might emerge that restoration was only possible at an utterly prohibitive level of cost).

5 CPR 31.12(2)(c).

550. Orders for disclosure against a person not a party.

On the application, in accordance with the following rules, of a party to any proceedings, the High Court and a county court have power to order a person who is not a party to the proceedings and who appears to the court to be likely to have in his possession, custody or power any documents which are relevant to an issue arising out of the claim:

- 619 (1) to disclose whether those documents are in his possession, custody or power; and
- 620 (2) to produce such of those documents as are in his possession, custody or power to the applicant or, on such conditions as may be specified in the order:
- 70 17. (a) to the applicant's legal advisers; or
- 18. (b) to the applicant's legal advisers and any medical or other professional adviser of the applicant; or
- 19. (c) if the applicant has no legal adviser, to any medical or other professional adviser of the applicant¹.
- 71

The relevant court must not, however, make such an order if it considers that compliance with the order, if made, would be likely to be injurious to the public interest².

Where an application is made to the court³ under any Act for disclosure⁴ by a person who is not a party to the proceedings, the application must be supported by evidence⁵. The court may make such an order only where the documents⁶ of which disclosure is sought are likely to support⁷ the case of the applicant or adversely affect the case of one of the other parties to the proceedings and disclosure is necessary in order to dispose fairly of the claim or to save costs⁸. The order must specify the documents or the classes of documents which the respondent must disclose⁹ and require the respondent, when making disclosure, to specify any of those documents which are no longer in his control¹⁰ or in respect of which he claims a right or duty to withhold inspection¹¹. Such an order may also require the respondent to indicate what has happened to any documents which are no longer in his control¹² and specify the time and place for disclosure and inspection¹³.

These provisions do not limit any other power which the court may have to order disclosure against a person who is not a party to proceedings¹⁴.

550 Orders for disclosure against a person not a party

NOTE 8--Frankson, cited, applied: Flood v Times Newspapers Ltd [2009] EWHC 411 (QB), [2009] EMLR 311 (disclosure against police refused).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(1) DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS/551. Restriction on use of a privileged document inadvertently inspected.

551. Restriction on use of a privileged document inadvertently inspected.

Where a party inadvertently allows a privileged¹ document to be inspected, the party who has inspected the document may use it or its contents only with the permission of the court². There is therefore no longer a need to seek an injunction to prevent use of inadvertently disclosed privileged documents, but the principles that emerged from cases relating to restraining injunctions may be relevant where an application is made for permission to use such documents³. Thus, for example, a solicitor considering documents made available by the other party to litigation owes no duty of care to that party and is in general entitled to assume that any privilege which might otherwise have been claimed for such documents has been waived⁴; and where a party has allowed the other party to inspect a privileged document by mistake it will in general be too late for him to claim privilege in order to attempt to correct the mistake⁵. However, the court may prevent the use of such documents where justice requires, for example where inspection of the documents has been procured by fraud or the documents have been made available as a result of an obvious mistake⁶. All will depend upon the particular circumstances, and there are no rigid rules⁷.

¹ 'Privilege' means the right of a party to refuse to disclose a document or to refuse to answer questions on the ground of some special interest recognised by law: see CPR 2.2, Glossary. As to the effect of a description in the Glossary see PARA 31. As to the meanings of 'disclosure' and 'document' see PARA 538. As to documents which are privileged from disclosure see PARA 555 et seq. 'Privilege' in the former rule was held to include irrelevancy: Ehrmann v Ehrmann [1896] 2 Ch 826; Birmingham and Midland Motor Omnibus Co Ltd v London and North Western Rly Co [1913] 3 KB 850, CA. But the present position is governed by the requirement to give 'standard disclosure': see CPR 31.6; and PARA 542. The court has power to inspect documents for which protection is claimed on any grounds: see CPR 31.19(6)(a); and PARA 555.

² CPR 31.20. As to the meaning of 'court' see PARA 22.

³ The principles were summarised in Al Fayed v Metropolitan Police Comr [2002] EWCA Civ 780 at [16], [2002] All ER (D) 450 (May) per Clarke LJ (referring to Guinness Peat Properties Ltd v Fitzroy Robinson Partnership [1987] 2 All ER 716, [1987] 1 WLR 1027; Derby & Co Ltd v Weldon (No 8) [1990] 3 All ER 762, [1991] 1 WLR 73; Pizzey v Ford Motor Co (1993) Times, 8 March; International Business Machines Corp v Phoenix International (Computers) Ltd [1955] 1 All ER 413; Breeze v John Stacey & Sons Ltd [1999] All ER (D) 648, (1999) Times, 8 July, CA).

A mistake is likely to be held to be obvious where the documents are received by a solicitor and (1) the solicitor appreciates that a mistake has been made before making some use of the documents; or (2) it would be obvious to a reasonable solicitor in his position that a mistake has been made: Al Fayed v Metropolitan Police Comr [2002] EWCA Civ 780 at [16], [2002] All ER (D) 450 (May); and see International Business Machines Corp v Phoenix International (Computers) Ltd [1955] 1 All ER 413. Where a solicitor gives detailed consideration to the question whether the documents have been made available for inspection by mistake and honestly concludes that they have not, that fact will be a relevant (and in many cases an important) pointer to the conclusion that it would not be obvious to the reasonable solicitor that a mistake had been made, but it is not conclusive; the decision remains a matter for the court: Al Fayed v Metropolitan Police Comr [2002] EWCA Civ 780 at [16], [2002] All ER (D) 450 (May). A solicitor who inspects a privileged document having realised that it was disclosed by mistake may be required to cease representation: see Ablitt v Mills & Reeve (a firm) (1995) Times, 25 October; Webster v James Chapmen & Co (a firm) [1989] 3 All ER 939.

552. Consequence of failure to disclose documents or permit inspection.

A party may not rely on any document¹ which he fails to disclose² or in respect of which he fails to permit inspection unless the court³ gives permission⁴. It is also possible that a failure to disclose may lead to striking out⁵.

553. Subsequent use of disclosed documents.

A party to whom a document¹ has been disclosed may use the document only for the purpose of the proceedings in which it is disclosed², except where:

- 621 (1) the document has been read to or by the court³, or referred to, at a hearing which has been held in public⁴;
- 622 (2) the court gives permission⁵; or
- 623 (3) the party who disclosed the document and the person to whom the document belongs agree⁶.

The court may make an order restricting or prohibiting the use of a document which has been disclosed, even where the document has been read to or by the court, or referred to, at a hearing which has been held in public⁷. An application for such an order may be made by a party⁸ or by any person to whom the document belongs⁹.

1 As to the meaning of 'document' see PARA 538.

2 Disclosed documents may be used not only in the action in which the disclosure is made but also for uses that flow from the purpose of the original proceedings: see eg Crest Homes plc v Marks [1987] AC 829, [1987] 2 All ER 1074, HL. As to the meaning of 'disclosure' see PARA 538.

(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION

(i) In general

555. Claim to withhold inspection or disclosure of a document.

A person may apply, without notice, for an order permitting him to withhold disclosure¹ of a document² on the ground that disclosure would damage the public interest³. Unless the court⁴ orders otherwise, such an order of the court must not be served⁵ on any other person⁶ and must not be open to inspection by any person⁷.

A person who wishes to claim that he has a right or a duty to withhold inspection of a document, or part of a document, need not apply to the court⁸ but must state in writing that he has such a right or duty and the grounds on which he claims that right or duty⁹. The statement must be made in the list in which the document is disclosed¹⁰ or, if there is no such list, to the person wishing to inspect the document¹¹. A party may then apply to the court to decide whether a claim so made should be upheld¹².

For the purpose of deciding an application to withhold disclosure or a claim to withhold inspection, the court may require the person seeking to withhold disclosure or inspection of a document to produce that document to the court¹³ and may invite any person, whether or not a party, to make representations¹⁴.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Rules relating to disclosure¹⁵ do not affect any rule of law which permits or requires a document to be withheld from disclosure or inspection on the ground that its disclosure or inspection would damage the public interest¹⁶.

556. Documents protected from inspection.

Although the obligation to produce documents for inspection is co-extensive with the obligation to disclose their existence¹, there are many such documents the existence of which must be disclosed in the list of documents but which are nevertheless protected from production. The grounds on which this protection can be claimed can be classified under the following main heads: (1) legal professional privilege²; (2) that production is contrary to public policy³; (3) that the documents in question may tend to incriminate the party or his spouse⁴; (4) that production is contrary to some statutory provision which imposes secrecy⁵; (5) that production is contrary to some express or implied agreement between the parties⁶; and (6) that production would, in the circumstances of the particular case, be disproportionate to the issues in the case⁷ or (formerly) oppressive⁸. The first four of these grounds⁹ protect documents from disclosure at the trial as well as part of the process of disclosure prior to trial, and may also be grounds for refusal to answer requests for further information¹⁰ or are grounds for refusing to answer questions asked of a witness at the trial¹¹.

None of these grounds, except the last, is now based on the discretionary power of the court¹² and they should not therefore be confused with cases where disclosure is not allowed, or is limited, under that power nor with cases where disclosure is not allowed at all. In exercising its discretion the court must have regard to the overriding objective of the new civil procedure¹³.

On the other hand, a party cannot object to producing a document not covered by legal professional privilege simply because the information contained in it was imparted to him in confidence, for 'confidentiality', as between a party to the litigation and a third party, is not a separate head of privilege though it may be a very material consideration to bear in mind when privilege is claimed on the ground of public interest¹⁴.

Moreover, the fact that documents are not in the sole possession or are not the sole property of the party having possession or are in his possession only as agent or on behalf of a person not a party to the proceedings does not by itself now afford a ground for objection to their production, since the test is whether they are or have been in the control of the party¹⁵.

1 See CPR 31.3; and PARA 539. A claim may, however, be made to withhold the disclosure of even the existence of a document, where it is alleged that such disclosure would damage the public interest: see CPR 31.19(1); and PARA 555.

557. Abolition of certain former privileges.

The following former grounds of privilege or objection to the production of documents or to answering any question in any civil proceedings¹ were abrogated by the Civil Evidence Act 1968 and do not afford protection against the disclosure of documents and their production for inspection, namely:

- 624 (1) the old rule that to do so would tend to expose a party to a forfeiture²;
- 625 (2) the old rule whereby a person other than a party to the proceedings could not be compelled to produce any deed or other document relating to his title to any land³;
- 626 (3) the old rule whereby a party to the proceedings could not be compelled to produce any document relating solely to his own case and in no way tending to impeach that case or support the case of any opposing party⁴;
- 627 (4) the old rule whereby a husband or wife could not be compelled to disclose any communication made to him or her by his or her spouse during the marriage⁵;
- 628 (5) the old rule whereby a husband or wife could not be compelled to give evidence to prove that marital intercourse did or did not take place between them during any period⁶;
- 629 (6) the old rule that a witness, including a party, in proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery could not be compelled to answer any question by reason that it tended to show that he or she had been guilty of adultery⁷.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/558. The nature of the privilege.

(ii) Legal Professional Privilege

558. The nature of the privilege.

It has been held that, as litigation can only be properly conducted by professional lawyers, it is necessary that a litigant should be able to have recourse to them in circumstances which enable him to place unrestricted confidence in the lawyer whom he consults and that the communications which he makes to that lawyer should be kept secret¹. Thus legal professional privilege has developed to protect communications between client and lawyer². The protection now takes two forms: 'litigation privilege' protects communications between a party and his lawyer, or between the party or his lawyer and a third party, where they are made for the purpose of preparing for legal proceedings; 'advice privilege' protects communications from disclosure where they are made to and from a legal adviser for the purpose of obtaining legal advice³. For these purposes, legal advice is not confined to telling the client the law; it must include advice as to what should prudently and sensibly be done in the relevant legal context⁴.

The law on this subject is based on the practice gradually evolved in the Court of Chancery⁵ but has received statutory confirmation in a number of instances where a government department is given power to obtain information from a subject but a legal adviser is protected from answering when the privilege exists⁶. Note, however, that a solicitor has a legal obligation to notify the police if he has reason to suspect his client of being involved in money laundering and in those circumstances he has no right to rely on professional privilege as to the communications between himself and his client if they are made with a view to furthering any criminal purpose⁷. Similarly, where words capable of being construed as a threat to kill were made by a client in the course of communications between himself and his solicitor about a conveyancing transaction, those communications were not protected by legal professional privilege⁸. It has been held that the covert surveillance provisions of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000⁹ extend to consultations between lawyer and client that are ordinarily protected by legal professional privilege¹⁰.

A person's legal representative need not, however, necessarily be a qualified barrister or solicitor: see the definition of 'legal representative' in CPR 2.3(1); and PARA 1833 note 13. See also PARA 559.

2 This privilege is quite separate from the defence of privilege which may be raised in an action of defamation in respect of words spoken or written between legal advisers and client: Minter v Priest[1930] AC 558, HL; and see also LIBEL AND SLANDER vol 28 (Reissue) PARA 99.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/559. Cases in which privilege arises.

559. Cases in which privilege arises.

Legal professional privilege¹ is confined to the legal profession; it extends to barristers, solicitors, licensed conveyancers, recognised bodies and legal executives in their employ, whether in private practice or employed full-time as salaried legal advisers by government departments or by commercial concerns, provided they are acting in their capacity as legal advisers², to the Director of Public Prosecutions³ and to foreign legal advisers⁴. The privilege does not extend to communications between a party and his medical adviser⁵, unless they are for the purpose of preparing for litigation; nor does it generally extend to communications with a spiritual adviser⁶ or non-professional friend or adviser⁷, or an accountant⁸, or a patent or trade mark agent⁹, or a pursuivant of the Herald's College¹⁰, or a society whose aid in the litigation is sought, and by whom the communications are laid before its solicitor for advice¹¹. In the case of a solicitor or counsel acting for a person receiving legal aid or where their fees are to be paid from the Community Legal Service Fund, the privilege is preserved¹².

Even in the case of a legal adviser communications are not privileged when he is consulted merely as a friend and not professionally, even though a desire to obtain the benefit of his professional knowledge prompted the communication¹³. To be protected the communication must be made to or by the legal adviser in that capacity¹⁴ and while the relationship of client and legal adviser subsists¹⁵. In considering these limitations on legal professional privilege the protection now accorded to statements made to persons acting as conciliators in matrimonial disputes should be kept in mind¹⁶.

Communications to and from a legal adviser that are made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice are privileged whether or not litigation is pending or contemplated¹⁷.

In three special cases the protection does not apply¹⁸: (1) when the communications are made for some fraudulent or illegal purpose¹⁹; or (2) when the client waives the privilege and permits disclosure²⁰; or (3) when the communications are made for the purpose of being repeated to the other party, such as an instruction to settle a claim for a specified sum²¹.

560. Extent of privilege.

Legal professional privilege does not extend to statements or documents which are in the public domain¹, such as shorthand or other notes of a hearing held in public or in open court², or in private³, or before an arbitrator⁴, or depositions filed in the course of proceedings⁵. A collection of copies or extracts of public records or documents, however, which is made or obtained by a solicitor for the purposes of legal proceedings, and is the result of his professional knowledge, research and skill, may be the subject of litigation privilege⁶.

Inspection may be ordered of a privileged document referred to in a statement of case⁷, and secondary evidence may be given of a privileged document despite the privilege attaching to the original⁸, although, if a copy is obtained improperly, an injunction may be granted restraining the use of that copy; and if inspection of a document is given inadvertently, then it may be used only with the court's permission⁹.

The privilege is the privilege of the client and his successor in title¹⁰ but a solicitor cannot claim privilege from disclosing the name of his client¹¹. He may, however, in some circumstances refuse disclosure of his client's address when communicated confidentially to him¹².

Documents that exist independently of legal advice do not become privileged merely by being given to the lawyer¹³: he cannot refuse to produce a deed unless his client was entitled to resist production¹⁴; nor can he refuse to state when he parted with it and to whom¹⁵, nor is he precluded from giving evidence as to who was present when a deed was executed¹⁶.

A statutory power which provides for the inspection of any documents in a solicitor's possession does not apply to a document in which legal professional privilege subsists¹⁷.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/561. Communications between client and legal adviser directly.

561. Communications between client and legal adviser directly.

Any communications, verbal or written, passing between a party or his predecessors in title¹ and his or their solicitors² or other legal professional advisers³ are privileged from production for inspection, provided they are confidential and spoken or written to or by the legal adviser in his professional capacity and for the purpose of getting or giving legal advice or assistance⁴, but not otherwise⁵. A document coming into existence under these conditions is privileged even though it is not in fact communicated⁶. The fact that a letter within the privilege contains statements of facts as to matters in the public domain does not take it out of the privilege⁷.

Bills of costs rendered by a solicitor, relating to litigation, actual or in contemplation, are also privileged⁸, so far as they do not extend to (1) what took place in the presence of the opposite party; (2) communications with the opposite party; (3) matters of fact which are in the public domain⁹.

1 This does not apply in cases of testamentary disposition by the client as between different parties all of whom claim under him, eg the privilege does not belong to executors as against the next of kin: Russell v Jackson (1851) 9 Hare 387. See also Reeves Bros Inc v Lewis Reed & Co Ltd [1971] RPC 355 (licensing arrangement with party to original litigation is not equivalent to a succession in title).

2 This includes a person who has been a solicitor, but who at the time of the communications had ceased to be one but not to the knowledge of the client: Calley v Richards (1854) 19 Beav 401.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/564. Communications between solicitor and non-professional agent or third party.

564. Communications between solicitor and non-professional agent or third party.

Litigation privilege can extend to communications between a lawyer or the lawyer's client and a third party where they are prepared for the purposes of litigation¹. Thus any communications passing, directly or through an agent², between a solicitor and a non-professional agent or a third party³ which come into existence after litigation is contemplated or commenced, and which are made with a view to such litigation, either for the purpose of obtaining advice as to the litigation or of obtaining evidence to be used in it, or of obtaining information which might lead to the obtaining of such evidence, are privileged⁴. So are documents obtained or prepared, confidentially, under like circumstances⁵, other than copies of unprivileged documents⁶. There is no rule of law that litigation cannot be contemplated or anticipated until a cause of action or part of it has arisen, and it is therefore sufficient if the communication is made in the bona fide belief or under a reasonable apprehension that litigation may ensue, and for that purpose⁷, but a mere vague apprehension of litigation is not sufficient⁸.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/565. Communications between party and non-professional agent, employee or third party.

565. Communications between party and non-professional agent, employee or third party.

Litigation privilege can extend to communications between a lawyer or the lawyer's client and a third party where they are prepared for the purposes of litigation¹. Communications between a party and a non-professional agent or employee or third party are only privileged if they are made both (1) in answer to inquiries made by the party as the agent for or at the request or suggestion of his solicitor², or without any such request, but for the purpose of being laid before a solicitor or counsel for the purpose of obtaining his advice or of enabling him to prosecute or defend an action³, or prepare a brief⁴; and (2) for the purposes of litigation existing or in contemplation at the time⁵. Both these conditions must be fulfilled in order that privilege may exist⁶.

In certain cases decided under the Common Law Procedure Acts⁷ a distinction was drawn between reports made by agents or employees of a party in the ordinary course of duty which were held not to be privileged, and reports specially obtained from experts, such as scientists or medical men, with a view to litigation which were held to be privileged, although it does not appear that the reports in question were obtained for the purpose of being laid before the party's legal adviser⁸. These cases are no longer authoritative⁹.

Documents prepared in relation to intended proceedings, whether at the request of a solicitor or not, and whether ultimately laid before the solicitor or not, are privileged, provided they are prepared with a bona fide intention of being laid before him for the purpose of taking his advice¹⁰. It is not necessary that the list or affidavit claiming privilege should state that the information was obtained solely or primarily for the solicitor, if it was obtained for him in the sense of being procured as materials upon which professional advice should be taken in proceedings pending or threatened or anticipated; if it was so obtained, it is nonetheless protected, even though the client intends to settle the case without recourse to the solicitor if he is able to¹¹.

Where documents are obtained for two or more separate purposes, they will only attract privilege from production for inspection if the dominant purpose for which they were prepared was for submission to a legal adviser¹².

Where, however, documents are already in existence in circumstances not in themselves giving rise to privilege, the mere fact of their being handed to the solicitor for the purposes of litigation does not create a privilege¹³.

566. Communications relating to a compromise.

A communication made by a party to his legal adviser for the purpose of being repeated to the other side is not privileged if the authority of the adviser to compromise a case is in question¹. A compromise by one party of a previous claim between himself and a third party is not privileged as such², but inspection may be refused on the ground that the third party has an interest in the document³. Documents which came into existence as a result of 'without prejudice' negotiations for a settlement may also be protected from disclosure⁴.

567. Reports made by agents or employees to employer.

Reports made by employees to their employers or by agents to their principals are not privileged unless they satisfy, and are privileged if they do satisfy, the conditions already set out, that is to say they must be reports made for the purpose of being laid before the party's legal adviser for the purpose of obtaining his advice in connection with the anticipated or pending litigation¹. In other words, litigation privilege may apply to such communications, but not legal advice privilege².

¹ See Three Rivers District Council v Bank of England [2003] EWCA Civ 474, [2003] QB 1556; and PARAS 564-565. This case opened the question in relation to companies or corporations as to who exactly constitutes the client, whether employees of the client are in fact third parties, and whether communications between the lawyer and the client's employees are privileged: the Court of Appeal held that such communications were not protected by legal advice privilege; on appeal the House of Lords declined the invitation to express a view on this point (see Three Rivers District Council v Governor and Company of the Bank of England [2004] UKHL 48 at [46]-[48], [2005] 1 AC 610 at [46]-[48], [2005] 4 All ER 948 at [46]-[48]).

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/568. Communications between parties to litigation.

568. Communications between parties to litigation.

It has been held that communications between co-plaintiffs (now known as co-claimants)¹ or co-defendants stand on the same footing as communications between a party and non-professional agents, and are privileged only under the same circumstances², but communications between one co-adventurer with the solicitors for another co-adventurer are treated as if they had been between a party and his own solicitor³. If one of several trustees is a solicitor, communications between him and his co-trustees which would have been privileged if he were not a co-trustee are privileged⁴.

On the other hand communications passing between opposite parties or made by or on behalf of the opposite party cannot be confidential, and are accordingly liable to disclosure⁵ unless they attract the protection of 'without prejudice' negotiations⁶.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/569. Communications for a fraudulent or illegal purpose.

569. Communications for a fraudulent or illegal purpose.

Confidential communications between a client and his legal adviser are not privileged if made for the purpose of committing a fraud or crime, or, a fortiori, when both are engaged in the commission of some wrongful act¹. In order that the protection may obtain there must be both professional confidence and professional employment. There can be no professional confidence as to the disclosure of communications of this nature, and the furtherance of a fraud, or assistance given for the purpose of wrongfully evading the law, is not part of the duty of a legal adviser towards his client². It has also been held that the protection does not apply where the communications relate to the subject matter of the fraud alleged and the advice is being sought for the client's guidance in the commission of the fraud, even though the solicitor is ignorant of that fact³. The rule does not apply merely because fraud, fraudulent misrepresentation, or the like is alleged in an action and privilege is only lost by the fraudulent party, not by a victim of it⁴. Privilege cannot be overcome merely by making a charge of fraud; there must be some prima facie evidence that the allegation has a foundation in fact⁵.

On the other hand, although fraud for this purpose includes not only the tort of deceit but all forms of fraud and dishonesty, it does not extend to the tort of inducing breach of contract or conspiracy to induce breach of contract⁶.

570. Privilege claimed by persons in fiduciary capacity.

When a fiduciary relationship exists, such as between a trustee and a beneficiary of the trust¹, or any analogous position², legal professional privilege cannot be claimed by the trustee, except in respect of communications and documents brought into existence by the trustee for the purpose of litigation against him by the beneficiary³. When there is a dispute between two beneficiaries in respect of the trust matters and the trustee acts as solicitor for one of them, communications between the trustee as solicitor and the beneficiary who is his client are not privileged against the other beneficiary⁴, but communications between one trustee and a co-trustee, who is a solicitor, are privileged against a beneficiary if made to obtain legal advice⁵.

571. Waiver of the privilege.

Where legal professional privilege exists it may be waived by the client¹ (whose privilege it is² and who can restrain the solicitor from disclosure³), but not by the solicitor or other legal adviser⁴. In the case of documents for which privilege can be claimed and which are brought into existence for the purpose of a claim which is ultimately not proceeded with, the privilege does not cease and can be claimed in a subsequent action⁵, for the general principle is that a document once privileged is always privileged⁶. The mere fact that documents used in previous litigation are preserved and not destroyed does not amount to a waiver of the privilege⁷. Until the client has waived the privilege, it is the duty of the solicitor to claim it⁸. The death of the client does not put an end to the privilege⁹ which can be claimed by his successor in title¹⁰.

Although a report prepared in contemplation of litigation may be privileged from production by the defendant in the litigation for whom it was prepared, the report will not be privileged in a subsequent claim for libel in respect of passages in the report brought by the same claimant against the person who prepared it¹¹.

However, there are certain circumstances where the waiver of privilege may be implied, such as: (1) the inadvertent production of privileged documents¹²; (2) the deliberate introduction at a trial of part of a privileged document impliedly waives privilege as to the whole¹³; (3) in a claim against a solicitor for negligence in one of a series of related transactions, there is an implied waiver of privilege in respect of documents relating to the whole series¹⁴.

Proceedings relating to the care of a child are so far removed from normal claims that legal professional privilege has no place in relation to reports obtained by a party which could not have been prepared without the court giving leave to disclose documents already filed at court or to examine the child¹⁵.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(ii) Legal Professional Privilege/572. Limited waiver of the privilege.

572. Limited waiver of the privilege.

Although generally once legal professional privilege has been waived it cannot be re-asserted¹, there may in certain circumstances be a limited waiver. Thus in taxation proceedings, where it may be necessary to disclose certain privileged information in order to reach a fair determination as to costs, it has been held that disclosure for the purpose of taxation of costs does not amount to waiver of the privilege in any other context².

Provided that it is not likely to mislead or cause injustice, a party may waive privilege in respect of part of a document whilst retaining it in respect of other parts³; however, the general assumption is that by revealing part of a privileged document a party has waived privilege in respect of the whole document, unless the rest of the document is clearly irrelevant and its non-disclosure will not distort the facts or otherwise cause injustice⁴.

In Bourns Inc v Raychem Corp, Aldous LJ said (at 162) that it 'is possible to waive privilege for a specific purpose and in a specific context without waiving it for any other purpose or in any other context'. This case was concerned with documents disclosed in taxation proceedings, but it is possible to find support for this as a general principle: see eg British Coal Corp v Dennis Rye Ltd (No 2) [1988] 3 All ER 816, [1988] 1 WLR 1113 (disclosure in criminal proceedings is not to be construed as waiver of the privilege; the documents remain privileged and may not be used in civil proceedings), although it is arguable that the point at issue in this case was a matter of admissibility rather than privilege. 573. Litigant in person.

It used to be said that when the litigation is conducted by the litigant in person it is doubtful whether there is any privilege for documents coming into existence as materials for or relating to the evidence of intended witnesses or otherwise for the purpose of the claim¹, but it has more recently been said that it must not be assumed that a litigant in person is denied, in preparing his litigation, the protection of secrecy which is enjoyed by a litigant who instructs a lawyer². If a litigant in person obtains advice from a legal representative³ in respect of the litigation, then any communications between them for that purpose would be privileged⁴.

1 In Kyshe v Holt, Childs and Brotherton [1888] WN 128 (which came before a divisional court consisting of Cave and AL Smith JJ), the judges differed. Cave J considered that there was no privilege, relying on Wheeler v Le Marchant (1881) 17 ChD 675, CA; AL Smith J considered that the privilege might obtain, relying on the judgment of Mellish LJ in Anderson v Bank of British Columbia (1876) 2 ChD 644, CA; but see Re Holloway, Young v Holloway (1887) 12 PD 167, CA, per Cotton LJ; also Jones v Great Central Rly Co [1910] AC 4, HL. (iii) Public Interest Immunity

574. In general.

It is a general rule of law founded on public policy and recognised by Parliament¹ that any documentary evidence may be withheld or an answer to any question may be refused on the ground that the disclosure of the document or the answering of the question would be injurious to the public interest². The rule is a rule of substantive law and may be described as a principle of constitutional law; it is not a mere matter of practice or procedure³. Accordingly, the liability of the Crown in civil proceedings to disclose documents and to produce them for inspection is without prejudice to the rule of law which authorises or requires the withholding of any document on the ground that its disclosure would be injurious to the public interest⁴. This right to withhold the disclosure and production of documents was formerly called 'Crown privilege', though perhaps erroneously⁵ since there is no question of any privilege in the ordinary sense of the word, and is now referred to as 'public interest immunity'. The fundamental problem is one of balancing or reconciling the two kinds of public interest which may clash; on the one hand, there is the public interest that harm should not be done to the nation or the public service by the disclosure of certain documents, and on the other hand, there is the public interest that the administration of justice should not be frustrated by the withholding of documents which must be produced in evidence if justice is to be done⁶.

¹ See the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 s 28(1) proviso; and see CPR 31.19(1); and PARA 555. There is the further exceptional statutory provision that even the existence of a document need not be disclosed if, in the opinion of a minister of the Crown, it would be injurious to the public interest to disclose its existence: see the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 s 28(2).

TEXT AND NOTES--The closed material procedure used in criminal proceedings cannot be adopted in a civil claim for damages: Al Rawi v Security Service[2010] EWCA Civ 482, [2010] All ER (D) 03 (May).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CIVIL PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-1108; VOLUME 12 (2009) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1109-1836)/14. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(iii) Public Interest Immunity/575. Circumstances in which public interest immunity may arise.

575. Circumstances in which public interest immunity may arise.

The claim to withhold documents from production for inspection or to refuse to answer any question on the ground of public interest immunity may arise in proceedings in which the Crown is a party¹, or in proceedings between private individuals in which the Crown is not a party²; it may arise at any stage before the trial by way of objection to the disclosure or inspection of documents³, or setting aside a witness summons⁴ or otherwise, or at the trial⁵; it may arise in relation to oral as well as to documentary evidence⁶; it may arise because of the contents of a particular document⁷ or (in the case of immunity claimed by non-governmental bodies) because the document belongs to a class which on the grounds of public interest must as a class be withheld from production⁸. Public interest immunity may thus apply to documents in the possession of a private individual as well as to documents in the possession of the Crown⁹ and can attach irrespective of where a document originates or in whose custody it reposes provided that it has properly either emanated from or come into possession of some servant or agent of the Crown¹⁰.

However it arises, public interest immunity can only be claimed¹¹ by the authority of the Crown and not by the authority of the person to whom the document relates¹². Secondary evidence may not be given of documents for which this immunity is established¹³; nor may a witness refresh his memory from such documents¹⁴. An objection on similar grounds to answering a request for further information will clearly be valid; and the opinion has been expressed that the same principle must apply to the exclusion of oral evidence which, if given, would jeopardise the interest of the community¹⁵. The extent of public interest immunity in relation to oral evidence is not clear; it may be within the competence of a minister to object to a witness giving evidence on a particular set or class of facts, but it is wrong to adopt a procedure which would prevent a witness who may be able to give other relevant evidence from giving any evidence at all; and the court will not entertain an application on behalf of the Crown to set aside the witness summons in such a case¹⁶.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(iii) Public Interest Immunity/576. Extent of public interest immunity; documents and sources of information.

576. Extent of public interest immunity; documents and sources of information.

Public interest immunity may be claimed:

- 630 (1) in the interests of national security, good diplomatic relations and international comity¹;
- 631 (2) to protect the identity of informants in criminal cases and sources of criminal intelligence generally²;
- 632 (3) where confidentiality is essential to the administration of justice³;
- 633 (4) in the interests of the proper functioning of the public service⁴; and
- 634 (5) in order to safeguard confidentiality where there is no compelling public interest in ordering the disclosure of the relevant information⁵.

Journalistic sources are afforded protection under the Contempt of Court Act 1981 which provides that no court may require a person to disclose the source of information contained in a publication⁶ for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime; further, subject to the same exceptions, refusal to disclose the source of such information is not a contempt of court⁷. This statutory protection is now fortified by the right to freedom of expression, which includes freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority, and which is given more direct effect in domestic law by the Human Rights Act 1998. The exercise of this freedom is, however, subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary⁸.

Objection based on public interest immunity should not be taken and will not be allowed to withhold the disclosure or production for inspection of documents on the ground that they are 'state documents' or 'official' or are marked 'confidential', or that, if they were produced, the consequences might involve the department or government in parliamentary discussion or in public criticism or might necessitate the attendance of witnesses or otherwise of officials who have pressing duties elsewhere, or that their production might tend to expose a want of efficiency in the administration or tend to lay the department open to claims for compensation. The production of documents should only be withheld where the public interest would otherwise be damnified⁹.

Public interest immunity was frequently claimed for particular classes of documents, and many of the authorities are decisions on such class claims¹⁰. However, in 1996 the Lord Chancellor announced that the division between class and content claims would be brought to an end with respect to government documents and that in future ministers would focus on the damage that disclosure would cause, only claiming immunity when they believed that disclosure would cause real damage or harm to the public interest. It was said that damage will normally have to take the form of direct or immediate threat to the safety of an individual or the nation's economic interests or relations with a foreign state, although in some cases, such as damage to a regulatory process, the anticipated damage might be indirect or longer term. In any event the nature of the harm will need to be clearly explained and ministers will no longer be able to claim immunity for internal advice or national security by reference to the general nature of the document¹¹.

Once the court has decided that documents are protected by public interest immunity, the protection continues though they may have passed into the possession of another person¹². There is, however, judicial authority to the effect that public interest immunity is provided against the disclosure of documents or their contents and is not, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, an immunity against the use of knowledge obtained from the documents¹³.

It is also in the public interest that the contents of confidential documents addressed to, or emanating from, foreign sovereign states or concerning their interests in relation to international territorial disputes between them, should not be ordered by the English courts to be disclosed by a private litigant without the consent of the states in question: Buttes Gas & Oil Co v Hammer (No 3) [1982] AC 888, [1981] 3 All ER 616, HL. International comity requires that an inter-departmental memorandum prepared and circulated in the London embassy of a friendly foreign state should not be admitted as the foundation of a claim for libel: Fayed v Al-Tajir [1988] QB 712, [1987] 2 All ER 396. Further, the comity of nations justifies an English court in the exercise of its discretion in refusing to authorise the issue of letters of request inviting the courts of a friendly foreign state to use their powers to assist in the obtaining of evidence, from witnesses resident in that or another friendly state, in order to show that the motives of the government of the friendly foreign state, in promulgating a particular law, were such that the law is unenforceable in the United Kingdom: Settebello Ltd v Banco Totta and Acores [1985] 2 All ER 1025, [1985] 1 WLR 1050, CA. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(iii) Public Interest Immunity/577. Right and duty of litigant to protect public interest.

577. Right and duty of litigant to protect public interest.

Although the privilege can only be claimed by the authority of the Crown, it is always open to any person to raise the objection that the production of documents for inspection will be injurious to the public interest¹. In litigation between private individuals it is the duty of the parties to draw the attention of the Crown to the possibility that the disclosure or production of documents would or might be injurious to the public interest, and if the Crown learns, whether from a party or otherwise, that such privileged documents may be disclosed or produced, the Treasury Solicitor or the solicitor for the appropriate department will direct the party likely to make or be called upon to make the disclosure or production to claim privilege on the ground that such disclosure or production would be injurious to the public interest, whereupon it will become that party's duty forthwith to raise the objection². If the opposite party should contest the claim for privilege by applying for an order for the production of documents³ the Crown may, if necessary, be allowed to intervene in the proceedings in order to be heard on the question and to support its objection to disclosure or production⁴. Indeed, in the last resort, the judge himself can and should take the objection, for the rule that the public interest must not be put in jeopardy by the production of documents which would injure it is one upon which the court should, if necessary, insist, even though no objection has been taken by any government department⁵.

1 See Rogers v Secretary of State for Home Department [1973] AC 388, [1972] 2 All ER 1057, HL. It has been suggested that, where there are a large number of relevant documents within the ambit of privilege which may or may not become of real materiality to the case as it develops, a counsel or solicitor on the government side or official of the department concerned should be present and invested with authority to consider claims of privilege and to waive them in particular cases: Ellis v Home Office [1953] 2 QB 135, [1953] 2 All ER 149, CA. This suggestion, however, relates only to the waiver of privilege after privilege has been established; where a certificate had been given by the head of a government department stating that it was not in the public interest that a witness should give evidence but it was not possible to ascertain from the certificate the nature of the evidence for which privilege was claimed, the court declined to allow counsel for the Crown to listen to each question and to take objection if he desired: Broome v Broome (Edmundson cited) [1955] P 190, [1955] 1 All ER 201. DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/(iii) Public Interest Immunity/578. Procedure on claim to public interest immunity.

578. Procedure on claim to public interest immunity.

The claim to public interest immunity must be made by the minister who is the political head of the department concerned or where it is not convenient or practicable for the political minister to act, because he may be out of reach or ill or the department is one where the effective head is the permanent official, it is reasonable for the claim to be made by the permanent head¹, such as the Chairman of the Commissioners for Revenue and Customs². The claim must be made in a proper form, whether in the form of an affidavit of the political minister or permanent head of the appropriate department or, as is the usual practice, in the ordinary run of cases, by a certificate signed by him personally³. The court, however, can request his personal attendance, though this is a rare practice⁴. The essential matter is that the decision to object should be taken by the political minister himself and that he should himself have seen and considered the documents and himself have formed the view that on grounds of public interest they ought not to be produced⁵. He cannot, however, be cross-examined⁶, though he may be given the opportunity to make or file a further certificate or affidavit setting out the claim with greater particularity⁷.

Such a claim usually arises at the disclosure stage of litigation⁸. It is apprehended that the principle of public interest immunity cannot be used to prevent a department of state from disclosing documents which the Secretary of State of that department considers it appropriate to disclose⁹.

579. Powers of court.

The decision whether to allow or reject the claim to public interest immunity, and if so to what extent¹, is and remains the decision of the court²; and the view of the political minister that the production or disclosure of documents or information should be withheld is not conclusive³, although the court will give full weight to the view of the minister in every case and must examine the objection and the grounds raised by the minister to support his view that production would be injurious to the public interest. If, in spite of the certificate or affidavit of the minister, the court is satisfied that the objection is not taken bona fide or that the grounds relied on by the minister are insufficient or misconceived or not clearly expressed or that there are no reasonable grounds for apprehending danger to the public interest, the court has power to override the objection⁴. For this purpose, the court is entitled to see the documents before ordering production⁵, and the court can see the documents without their being shown to the parties, but the minister should have a right to appeal before the documents are in fact produced⁶.

Less harmful consequences are likely to flow from a successful claim to public interest immunity if the proceedings are conducted in as normal a manner as possible and the court and the parties do their best to limit the prejudice to the party deprived of disclosure of the documents by giving him so far as is possible information which is necessary by other means⁷.

DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS/(2) EXCEPTIONS TO THE OBLIGATION TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS FOR INSPECTION/ (iv) Privilege against Self-incrimination/580. Privilege against incrimination of self or spouse or civil partner.

(iv) Privilege against Self-incrimination

580. Privilege against incrimination of self or spouse or civil partner.

There is a general rule of evidence that a person should not be compelled to say anything which might tend to bring him into the peril and possibility of being convicted of a criminal offence¹. Hence in any civil proceeding, any person, whether a party or not, cannot be compelled to produce any document or thing for inspection or to answer any question, if to do so would tend to expose that person, or his spouse or civil partner², to proceedings for an offence or for the recovery of a penalty, but this rule applies only as regards criminal offences³ under the law of any part of the United Kingdom and penalties provided for by such law, and does not extend to criminal offences under foreign law⁴. The rule applies even if a negative answer will not imperil the person concerned⁵, but the fact that a document contains matter which would or might tend to incriminate the party giving disclosure does not entitle him to refuse to include the document in his list of documents⁶. The proper course is to disclose the document in the list and therein raise the ground of objection to produce it⁷. So far as disclosure is concerned, the rule has a number of statutory exceptions⁸. A party is not necessarily obliged to state his belief that the production would incriminate him; it is sufficient to state or to swear that it may tend to do so⁹. The fact that a party states or swears that his answer would tend to incriminate him is not conclusive and the court may compel him to answer where the objection is plainly made in bad faith or where it is not made to appear that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger¹⁰. Disclosure must, however, be given if by reason of pardon¹¹, lapse of time¹², or waiver¹³, all danger of punishment has passed. Further, where there is an admission that the penalties have been incurred, disclosure as to the matters referred to in the admission cannot be resisted¹⁴. When an action is brought for breach of copyright of an unpublished work the court will not allow the claimant to refuse to disclose the work and at the same time to proceed to trial; he must either elect to have the work produced or have the action dismissed¹⁵.

The privilege against self-incrimination may only be invoked so as to refuse disclosure of documents or things which are ordinarily discoverable, and does not extend to independent matters coming to light in the execution of a court order¹⁶.

A mere danger of disgrace or opprobrium does not enable a party to escape from the obligation of giving disclosure¹⁷, though where disclosure is calculated to discredit the party it may be resisted as being scandalous¹⁸.

The protection only extends to the party, and his spouse in the case of a criminal charge or penal proceeding¹⁹, and not to any other person²⁰; thus an agent cannot resist disclosure on the ground that it will incriminate his principal, except in so far as it would also affect him personally²¹.
